Orange Line Aussie?

It was the morning of April 15 and we were caught up in the chaos of the Orange Line incident. At Wellington station we both grabbed copies of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, thus my hope that you might actually be reading this right now. After assisting you by providing directions to your destination, I complimented you on the beauty of your extraordinary eyelashes. You also had sparkling brown eyes, brown hair and an intriguing accent, possibly Australian? You were wearing a two-tone blue Columbia coat and jeans. If you remember this encounter and are interested, let's get together for lunch or a coffee. I'm curious to know what brings such a fetching girl to the States and whether you're into sports-adventure activities.

—MrMysteriousX@hotmail.com

Doctor TC at MGH

Two things: The first is, thank you for making me feel so much calmer as I waited in the "staging room" outside the OR on April 2. Usually I am all nerves before surgery (who could blame me), but you distracted me with conversation, reassurance and yes, your pleasing looks, and for that I am very grateful. And how interesting to find out I had previously been a featured case in grand rounds! Not very many women can tell that story to their friends. Secondly, I'd love to meet you again, when I am not laying on a gurney with a blue shower cap—as lovely and alluring as it might be—on my head. I don't know that you're always up for a drink, conversation and fun. All I can say is if you have to have surgery, why not meet a very nice and cute guy at the same time?

Arr, Matey

You: Gap Girl in Central Square with short, dark hair and cute tortoiseshell glasses. Me: hefty guy in orange raincoat, galoshes and black glasses buying my niece a birthday gift. Our eyes met, my ears turned red and you smiled. You made this fisherman get wobbly on dry land. Maybe we can meet sometime and I could make you my catch of the day.

Watertown Proper Bostonian

Suzy, I was lucky to speak with you and get your name. I know that you are a very reserved and proper Bostonian who is on a fast-track career path. You are focused on your work and leave little time for extravagances such as lunch at a restaurant of your choice. I know that you are looking to let your hair down and "have some fun." I also know that there is a cultural difference between us. You seem to simmer under your cool facade. You are tall, dark-haired and have beautiful, long legs. You are exotic in appearance and inscrutable in your actions. I know that you desire to throw caution to the wind. Take a chance and see where we are taken. I would really like to have the opportunity to finish what we were trying to start.

—Nick, gsbost@yahoo.com

Dear Betty-Mouse

I write to express my intense desire to recapture your heart. I know you love me, as I still am in love with you. I understand that you are having trouble with a relationship, and not necessarily me. I need you to know that I will continue to seek out your good graces, to be your companion, and feel an intense desire to continue to work together to make us the best we can be with each other. For my faults I ask your forgiveness, for it's most painful for me to realize I pushed you away from me through some of my actions—or in some cases, inactions. To have had you in my life—trips to Quebec City, Christmas in Tennessee, Sunday drives—has been the greatest of pleasures. I will respect your decision, but understand that as time passes, our time will pass with it. I will no longer be able to harbor such feelings for you, and unfortunately will most likely exit your life forever. Gift me with your blessings of companionship and love and don't run from our relationship, for I am a better man because of you. I love you much.

—Your big fish

Tired

I am tired of being used by you. You say we are friends but that usually means me giving you money. I'm done supporting whatever bad habits you are into. You need to get yourself in rehab and stop begging your friends to give money. You had a decent job and apartment and now you're ruining your life. Maybe if more of us say no you'll get the help you need.

—Boston Bill

From San Fran Man

This is for the sweet, crazy, nervous, beautiful girl from South Kingstown who rides the Red Line from Porter Square to South Station every day. You probably don't know this but it is the little things that made me love you so. Your ability to overload me with stand-up comedy material, your fantastic dancing skills and your spacious apartment. I will think about all of those times that we were together, good and bad, and how I wanted you passionately. You will always occupy a special place in my heart. All I can do now is fall back on the lyrics of a song from a long time ago: "Now it's night, once again. And that same old feeling is setting in. It all seems so familiar but I hope this time. That the girl on the moon will soon be mine. All mine, tonight." I love ya, kid! Come rain or come shine!

—The King of San Francisco

Baxter's Owner

I've seen you a couple of times down at the waterfront with your yellow lab, Baxter. I'm one of the women who comes with my dog. You seem very nice and friendly, and if you're curious to know which one I am then e-mail me to find out. Maybe we can get together sometime.

—princessnavy2001@yahoo.com

Dear Life Coach

I wanted to thank you for teaching me about who you really are and how incredibly feeble, selfish, shallow, desperate and conniving a person like you can be. You came on with airs as someone who is very secure and solid, caring and helpful and in the know. You lied to everyone. You are not even from here and you act like you belong. You don't belong here. How dare you try to swindle the people of Boston out of their money in offering your "services." When we met, you couldn't have posed more perfectly as a true friend and aide when we were in need. We lost everything in our life and you were right there like a desperate rat to take advantage of us and our situation in any way you could, the whole time acting like you really cared. You knew exactly what you were doing. With the moves that you made, you gave new meaning to the term "kicking someone when they're down." When things started to change and sorrow and loss turned into opportunity, (not for you) then you started to panic. Trying your best, you attempted to move all of your pieces on the chessboard to trick us and take all you could from our misfortune turned good, but you lost the game, and you will continue to lose until you come from a truthful place and stop thinking the world owes you something because your "spouse" up and left you. True "life coaches" do not coach for their own personal gain. You are not a life coach. You are an "imported" closeted lesbian and pitifully damaged person who should go back to where you came from and leave us native Bostonians alone. Thank you for the education.

APRIL 28 – MAY 11, 2004

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

TAURUS APRIL 20–MAY 20

Lucky at cards and lucky at love: It's a rare and wondrous thing, the rewarding earth trine between generous Jupiter in Virgo and the productive Taurus sun. Be grateful that after 12 years patiently awaiting your turn, this particular trine aspect has finally come around again. There may have been notable triumphs in between, but the support you're getting from the stars this week favors your body, mind and spirit, the creative work you do and the risks you take. Wait until Mercury turns direct on the 30th before accepting the glory and the goodies.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

A casual acquaintance or an organization of well-intentioned folks could help with a trying situation at home. Don't be averse to accepting their advice simply because you think you're smart enough and strong enough to solve your own problems. True, some of the financial burden lifts once your Mercury ruler goes direct on the 30th, but it could be another week or two until you get the response you're seeking from your usual allies. Right now, you're all quite defensive about your positions, and no one wants to be the first to cave.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

It looks like the power behind the throne may harbor plans to divide and conquer. Protect your turf and try to avoid taking sides; the lunar eclipse May 4 could diminish your influence and/or affect your income. Since that's also the day that Jupiter comes out of retrograde, you're justified in wondering, Is there a payoff on the horizon? Before pushing for an answer, wait to see what follows from the full moon confrontation. Mars' entrance into Cancer on the 7th gives you more energy, courage and chutzpah.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

This week you bounce back from whatever damage may have been inflicted by the first partial solar eclipse of the year. Nothing is as effective a remedy for Leos as the rewarding trine between lucky Jupiter and your sun ruler. And to keep you from sharing your bounty with the world, as is your custom, the sun also forms a positive sextile with sensible Saturn. Riches and realism! Prizes and practicality! Wow! Mercury turning direct on the 30th lifts travel restrictions, making it safe to surf for a luxurious vacation destination.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Like the Lion, Virgins are due to receive generous blessings from the sun's favorable trine to growth-oriented Jupiter in your sign. If no notable reward shows up today, don't complain. Wait until May 4, when enthusiastic Jupiter comes out of retrograde and begins to deliver on its promise of prosperity. And don't discount your Mercury ruler's change of direction either; once it's moving forward, it'll provide another piece of the puzzle known as the family dilemma. The drama intensifies May 1. May Day! May Day!

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

By hook or by crook, you're determined to get your own way, particularly if a neighbor or a sneaky sibling opposes your plan. The customary Libran charm, sociability and tact might not melt their resistance, but since you have enough resources at your disposal right now, you can circumvent a dramatic climax if you want to. Who's kidding whom? Who would want to? A kicking, screaming battle of wits and wiles would keep you entertained—I mean engrossed—far longer than any peaceful, diplomatic resolution. Bring on the fireworks.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

You want what you want, you want it now and you want it bad. This longing for a thing of beauty isn't simply another casual stroll through your house of acquisitions and assets, but a well-thought-out campaign to nail the object of your desire. As long as your Pluto co-ruler is being seduced by venal Venus, you're pretty much at the mercy of your passion. Once May is over, you could get a break, a time-out; however the itch to possess, if not this prize, then one that's equally attractive, will reappear in July.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Like Scorpio, you may become obsessed with something or someone just out of reach. While Venus in "here, there, everywhere" Gemini tantalizes Pluto in your sign, it'll be hard to hang on to what you think you got. This on-again, off-again relationship can drive you to distraction for the next three months. Meanwhile, blessings befall you while the pleasure-loving Taurus sun trines your Jupiter ruler midweek. The good fortune-cookie prediction, the lucky break you stumble into and the loving arms that catch you should not be taken for granted.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Mercury turns direct in your home base and puts the petty annoyances you've endured during retrograde to rest. News about a worrisome family matter takes an upward turn, and other people's money becomes readily available soon after Jupiter also goes direct. There's a comfy, cozy feeling that things are going to be fine, that you've passed some sort of test. Whether you still feel this way once aggressive Mars enters your Cancer marriage house on the 7th is arguable. And arguing is what you'll be doing a lot of—that and having make-up sex.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

So much for the love fest. There could be trouble in paradise this week as friends and lovers, theirs and yours, no longer see eye-to-eye. Jealousy, deception, even a juicy bit of gossip might unleash a storm that could rage on and off for three interminable months. Stay out of it as long as you possibly can. It's enough that you weather the tempest tossed your way during the Taurus-Scorpio lunar eclipse on the 4th. Choosing between career and family is always tricky business. Go with your gut reaction.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Rally round your flag of choice! Independent Uranus in your sign is featured this week, encouraging you to let your more radical sentiments and offbeat ideas loose on the rest of us. Jupiter, turning direct in your house of partners, makes your significant others, both the allies and the antagonists, more receptive than they've been all year long. Chances are they may even listen. Chances also are that once Mercury in your Aries money house faces forward on the 30th, you can cash in on other people's good fortune. Take a chance.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

If you're gearing up for battle—as the Aries warrior, if only to blow off steam, periodically does—don't underestimate your current opponent or the target of your anger. What may seem like an easygoing, devil-may-care foe is really a cunning manipulator who won't willingly relinquish his or her hold over you. While your Mars ruler confronts power-crazed Pluto—thankfully it's only once every two years—the conflict could get a lot worse if you stick to your guns. Try an alternative approach.

CAREFUL WHAT YOU BID ON; YOU MIGHT GET IT...

It was like a quick jaunt around the world—minus the jet lag, strange food and surly security people telling you to take your shoes off—when Thompson Island Outward Bound hosted its Circle the Globe fund-raiser at the Park Plaza.

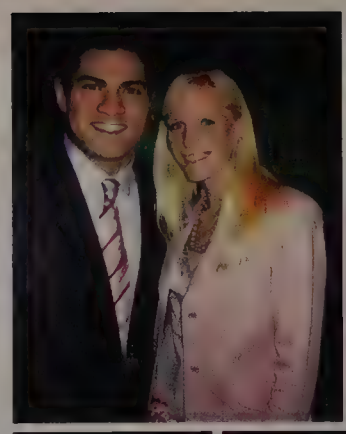
The evening began with cocktails, a silent auction and the milling around of such notably high-profile types as travel titans Alan and Harriet Lewis of Grand Circle Corp. (the evening's honorees); Brahmin board member George Lewis; power plant potentate Jim Gordon and his stunning other half, Meg; the exceedingly chic Jana Reed, squired by the improbably tall Jay Gordon; Jay's party-monster parents, Lloyd and Diane; Back Bay lovebirds George Denny and Leigh Weatherly; the vivacious Janet Roache; blonde glamazon Allison Drescher; the noticeably pregnant Karen Vigurs-Stack and Molly Dunne with the respective expectant fathers, Ken Stack and Stephens Dunne; power-broker George Regan; and others of an equally impressive ilk.

Everything had a globe-trotting theme—from the blow-up globes that served as centerpieces to the place cards that looked like boarding passes—and anyone with a few thousand dollars to spare could bid on such items as a week-long cycling trip in Tuscany, a first-class trip to London with an insider's tour of Windsor Castle, and an exotic, adventurous fortnight in Costa Rica.

The winner of a week's stay at a private beachfront home on Cape Cod, however, seemed somewhat clueless about what she was bidding on.

"One glass of wine and I'm spending 2,500 bucks to rent a house in Harwichport!?" she said to her tablemates. "Oh, well. If all of you come, it'll be worth it."

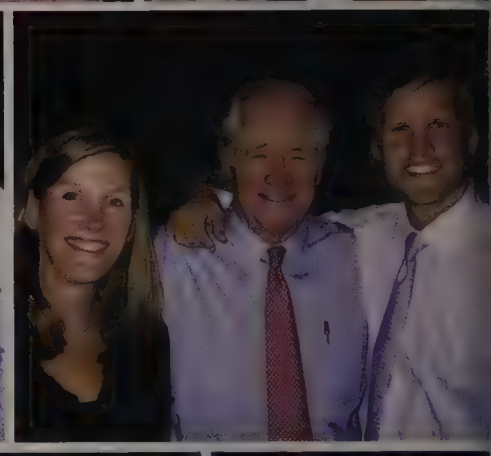
HOW TO PUT YOUR BOSS IN THE HOT SEAT...



Under One Roof was an aptly named event, given the assortment of bigwigs and boldfaced names assembled in one room to raise money for Wellspring House, a Gloucester-based charity aimed at ending homelessness.

Held at the Cyclorama, the festivities started with martinis and a raw bar that would have made the Gorton's fisherman blush, followed by an elegant sit-down dinner, entertainment by the likes of the Boston Children's Chorus and a quartet called Bluegate, and the usual dosage of speeches and awards.

Among the high-and-mighty on-hand: honorees Anne and Chad (Fleet Bank) Gifford; Phyllis and Paul (Reebok) Fireman; Jane and Bill (old Yankee money) Saltonstall; Bank of America CEO Ken Lewis; advertising behemoth Jack Connors of Hill, Holliday; Red Sox CEO Larry Lucchino and his lovely wife, Stacey; Lieutenant Governor Kerry Healey; NFL Napoleon Bob Kraft and the Empress, Myra, with several players from the Super Bowl–winning Patriots; United Way honcha Marian Heard; philanthropic fun couple Caroline and Bob Collings; éminence grise Hubie Jones; and so on and so forth down the list of people with serious juice in this town.



In the middle of each table was a limited-edition ceramic vase by sculptor Miranda Thomas that the highest bidder at each table got to take home. It was an effective fund-raising device and undoubtedly upped the ante by forcing groups of high-rollers who were seated together to compete to see who was the most generous.

In fact, in his remarks to the crowd, Patriots linebacker Tedy Bruschi said: "There's a lot of deep pockets at my table. Bob Kraft, I'm lookin' for a big number!"

At Under One Roof, top row: Tedy and Heidi Bruschi; Caroline and Bob Collings. Middle row: Bob Kraft; Betsy Gifford, Chad Gifford and Betsy's husband, Charlie. Bottom: Carol Fulp and Marian Heard

BEYOND THE USUAL BLAH, BLAH BLAH...

Ralph Waldo Emerson wrote, "Without a rich heart, wealth is an ugly beggar," which is undoubtedly why everyone looked so gorgeous at the fund-raiser for the Pine Street Inn's homeless-women's shelter, held at the Westin.

The evening began with a VIP meet-and-greet with Pulitzer Prize–winning author Frank McCourt, and the eclectic crowd included the likes of real estate developer Bob Walsh; senatorial widow Nikki Tsongas; Globe publisher Richard Gilman; WBZ on-air babe Robin Hamilton; the Mayor and Mrs. Menino; banking bombshell Allison Bibbins Ward of Mellon; soignee sophisticate Sandy Shapiro; gorgeous shutterbug Tanit Sakakini; renowned South End artist Joanne Rothschild; tireless volunteer Kate McCandless Tomkinson; Irish consul general Isolde Moylan McNally; and the lovely Joanne Magliozzi (wife of Car Talk's Tom).

Following dinner, there were some well-chosen words from McCourt, who recalled how he helped feed homeless men during his own desperately poor childhood, and a few more from big-shot attorney and board member Vin McCarthy, who said that instead of worrying about whether Kevin should be able to marry Mitchell, we should be worrying about all the people who don't have a roof over their heads.

"I go to a lot of run-of-the-mill, chicken-on-a-plate fund-raisers," said one woman, "but this is the first one I remember where the speeches were not only interesting but true." iB

HOMETOWN HOMAGE

As the flowers pop up in the Public Garden, so do those other Boston perennials: tourists. Armed with maps and guidebooks, they pose for pictures with the ducklings, traipse the Freedom Trail and shop Faneuil Hall. They're discovering the city that we see every day and that we, being human, sometimes take for granted because it's so familiar.

In planning our Why We Love Boston issue, we took a step back and looked at all those local highlights the guidebooks tell tourists to appreciate on a visit to Boston—and the things tourists can't truly know because they don't live here. What local landmarks and traditions are we most deeply attached to? Who are the people we're glad to claim as our own? What would we miss most if we moved away?

We boiled it all down to 10 people, 10 places and 10 things (page 19)—by no means a complete list, but, as writer Jonathan Soroff puts it, "It's a start and something to keep in mind the next time you find yourself wondering how you wound up here or why you continue to stay."

That's Boston as we see it now. What the future holds, we can only guess, and Ezra Dyer takes a wild stab at that in "Boston 2054" (page 26).

TAKING SIDES

Couldn't Chris Collins come up with a better story line than a lifeless recap of yesterday's news? ("Time to Dream Again," April 14). Last season ended with shattered dreams and now a new season has begun with a fresh outlook? Really? Where was Collins after the other heartbreak seasons of 1967, 1975, 1978, 1986, 1995 and 2001? For decades Red Sox fans have been notorious for their short memories and their ability to carry on with the "this is the year" mantra. Mr. Collins' stating of the obvious in a story lacking insight or intrigue was a major disappointment—just like so many Red Sox seasons. I look forward to the 2004 baseball season, but I can't say the same of the next Collins entry. This is the year!

—DANNY KILE
Boston

I just read Chris Collins' "Time to Dream Again" column, and I could not agree more with this man. It is time to move on from the 2003 Red Sox season and look forward. Like Collins, I was in Baltimore for the season opener against the Orioles. He's right on when he says that Kevin Millar is still smiling and David Ortiz is still rocking. I had the opportunity to meet a couple of the players and there was no talk of 2003. Only 2004. That's what its all about—faith and hope that this could be the year. Baseball is back in Boston. Life is good.

—MAGGI HEALEY

LETTERS ON LETTERS

A quick response to Ms. Webb's comments to the editor entitled "Uh-oh Boys," which appeared, ironically, in the Dating Issue (April 28): While her response was quite predictable and somewhat understandable, it unfortunately missed, and indeed highlighted, the point Gregg was trying to make. Boston women are among the smartest, wittiest, most active women in the country. Unfortunately, they're also among the most insecure, particularly about their looks. Hey, if you've "accomplished something positive, learned something new, or just bought a new pair of shoes," you have every right to strut. Men love happy, self-confident women. What men don't love is women trying to be something they're not, and here's where the problem lies. Don't strut "like a 10," Sarah, strut like you. The frustration isn't that Boston women aren't "10s"—most of us guys aren't either. What's frustrating is when we approach a woman to engage in light conversation and we get a look back that suggests that unless we look like Brad Pitt or have Trump-like wealth we don't belong in the same area code.

As someone who's lived in both LA and NYC, I prefer Boston, and there's no doubt the "beauty quotient" is a lot higher in those cities. Strangely enough, a "10" attitude gets old pretty fast, even if you are a "10." Here's to a little self-confidence and using the assets you do have, and you have plenty. Good luck and happy hunting.

—JIM BROWN
Boston

I am writing to address the letter to the editor entitled "Socking Sox Fans" (April 28). I believe that I speak for all Boston sports fans when I ask, "Where is Brian Fox from, because surely it's not Boston?" If you were not thoroughly scarred emotionally (and in some cases physically) by what happened last year in Game Seven of the ALCS, then how dare you call yourself a true Bostonian, never mind a Red Sox fan?

If I were Brian, I would consider myself lucky that I didn't get my ass kicked for turning on the World Series in that pub.

—ANDREA GIACALONE

A THAI TREAT

Anyone who bought property in the South End more than five years ago is probably jumping up and down with joy. (Five years ago, you could buy a one-bedroom in the South End for $200,000; now, nothing goes for less than $300,000.) The area is still expanding at an unbelievable rate, bringing in all kinds of shops, restaurants and boutiques.

The central part of the South End is recognized as the center for shopping and dining. (B&G Oysters and the Butcher Shop recently joined the multitude of restaurant options.) But the trickle-down effect has recently made its way to the western part of the South End, near Mass. Ave. Here, three specialty shops have just popped up on Shawmut Avenue—a cozy new salon called Moxie Star; Inner Nourishment, a homeopathy and nutrition counseling service next door; and, a few steps further down, Richella's skin-care studio.

Nearby, on Washington Street near the intersection with West Springfield, a new restaurant, Equator, is set to open in mid May.

Equator is set to open in mid May.

Chef and owner Somchai Sriweownetr

Crab cakes served with creole tartar sauce

It's run by the Sriweownetr family, who also own the cozy Thai Village restaurant on Tremont Street. Although Equator's menu is heavily Thai-influenced, it features a wild mix of ethnic cuisines, from classical European to American and Italian. Traditional dishes like pad thai, lemongrass chicken, and crispy duck panang are joined by distinctly un-Thai options like boneless spare ribs, mad cow pasta, fettuccini and southern tomato salad. Most entrées are about $12–$16, with prime rib options in the $20 range.

Thai Village fans will notice other differences in addition to the varied menu. To go with its pricier menu, Equator is roomier—it seats 50—and more elegant as well. It also has an extensive dessert menu. Choices range from chocolate mousse to fried ice cream and crème brûlée. Once it receives a permit, Equator plans to serve breakfast outside on the patio, with traditional American fare. 1721 Washington St., Boston (617-536-6386). Open daily, 11 am-10 pm (a bit later on weekends). —E.H.

MAKEOVERS & MODELS

If you've walked by a Victoria's Secret lately, you may have noticed the retailer is revamping the stores to match its ad campaign: super sexy and sultry (weird Bob Dylan cameos excluded). Black, creme and titanium designs will replace the dainty, pink boudoir feel. Also new is VS's makeup line—I tried it and was pleasantly surprised. The shades are a perfect blend of color and subtlety and glide on smooth as silk. If you're looking for an excuse to check them out, head to the Copley Place VS store May 26 for makeup demos and appearances by legendary makeup artist Charlie Green and supermodel Gisele. —Samantha House

MISSED MANNERS

Everyone has childhood memories of being coached to say "please" and "Thank you." Fast-forward to adulthood, and while please and thank you are still part of the drill, social situations are governed by enough rules of decorum to trip up most of us at least once in a while. Marblehead-based manners guru Jodi R.R. Smith, owner of the etiquette consulting firm Mannersmith, simplifies social dos and don't's in her new etiquette books, The Girl's Guide to Social Savvy and The Guy's Guide to Social Savvy. Smith recently spoke with the IMPROPER about the etiquette evolution, the rules of cell phones and the ongoing debate of how long you have to give a wedding gift.

Jodi R.R. Smith

IB: How do you keep up with the rules of etiquette?

JS: There are overarching guidelines, and the specifics change with the times. One of the things I like to say in my seminars is that etiquette is evolution. One guideline is, you pay attention to who you're with. For example, if we're having tea on Newbury Street and a friend of mine walks by, I might wave and introduce her to you, but I wouldn't go off with her and leave you at the table. People are saying there's no etiquette for cell phone usage; well, of course there is. You pay attention to who you're with. A lot of people didn't understand the guideline to begin with and had no idea of it as the technology evolved.

IB: What's a rule of etiquette that's really changed over the years?

JS: It's hard to say because the more things change, the more the guidelines stay the same: being thoughtful, respectful. There are a lot of nasty myths out there, [such as] you have a year to give a wedding gift. That's not the case. You should be giving a wedding gift in advance. Since we're coming up on wedding season, people should be aware of this. The gift should be sent to the bride or the bride's family.

IB: If you could offer one key piece of advice for a social setting what would it be?

JS: For dinner, the one thing I recommend is to give your guests an idea of what you're planning to order. The overarching guideline here is symmetry of dining. If go to dinner with my husband and I order a soup, a salad, an entree and dessert, he really shouldn't be ordering just an entrée.

IB: What's the biggest difference in etiquette between men and women?

JS: The biggest difference is that women are—and I'm talking in gross stereotypes—a little more tuned in to the guidelines of behavior than men. The way to think about it is that women tend to interact in inclusionary circles and men tend to interact in hierarchical forms. I think both genders need a little brushing up.

IB: In which area are people most clueless?

JS: I have two biggest sellers—the things I get hired for. Number one is gracious dining. If you've eaten out recently you've seen people not putting their napkins in their lap, not waiting for everyone to be served. There are so many little things that go into making a meal pleasant. The second is small talk. I get brought into corporations to help marketing and sales people with their clients. Eating with each other and talking nicely with each other seem to be the two biggest challenges right now. —Jessica Iredale

Best Domestic Airline

– Condé Nast Traveler, 2002 & 2003 Readers' Choice Awards

(And a few choice words from our customers, too.)

"Thank you for treating all your customers like first-class passengers. My flight could not have been better." — Donna Lamy

"JetBlue is the best thing that ever happened to air travel. I frequently tell friends and family how fantastic JetBlue's service and performance are. Don't change a thing!" — Margaret Shea

"JetBlue is the only airline I choose to fly. The comfort and friendly service top all others."— Michael Lallo

"Just finished booking a flight and everything was very easy. You designed your website for people like me, who like things that are easy to work with."
— Gerald Weir

"I don't know how far this e-mail will actually go, but I hope it does go somewhere because my experience with JetBlue was and has been fantastic."
— B.B.

"I usually feel like I am nothing more than one of many herded cattle in the cabin, but the lightheartedness and happy personalities I found at JetBlue were refreshing." — Dominick Caputo

"Please don't change – except if you want to start offering more free flights to loyal customers like me!"
— Anne Le Brun

"Clearly JetBlue is doing something right – hiring great people who understand the lifetime value of a customer." — Debra Bluman

"I feel like if JetBlue doesn't fly there, then I don't want to go there!" — Sarah Uzelac

"What I especially liked is when I booked online and made a mistake, I immediately called and, without question, the mistake was corrected. Keep up the good work." — J.M.K.

"While the big guys have forgotten that the customer should at least be treated politely, you are surpassing my expectations in regard to friendliness and efficiency!" — Sandra Roberts

"At last, an airline that does what an airline is supposed to do – get you safely to your destination, get you there on time and actually treat the customer as a real human being. Bravo!!!" — Walter Gordon

"As long as you are going where I need to go, you will have our business." — Cathleen Odijk

"My kids keep talking about the TV, the Terra Chips® and the shapes on the tails of your planes. When they're happy and excited, so are the parents."
— Debbie Sansolo

"I loved this airline, and I will never fly another again unless JetBlue doesn't fly to where I'm going."
— Lauren Dalton

"Thank you for making travel enjoyable and affordable again." — Karen Evans

"Beyond pricing, you've improved the flying experience. JetBlue has shown that all airlines aren't alike, and need not be boring mass transit. Continued success." — Eric Bogel

"I love flying your airline!! Everyone has such positive energy. Great job and keep smiling." — Donna Wahlig

"If flattery will, indeed, get me everywhere, let me start by saying I absolutely LOVE flying JetBlue. Your planes more comfortable – the seats, the legroom, the ECTV... the list goes on." — Trish Doherty

't want to take any other airline ever again."
— E. Gabay

"Because I'm tall, the best thing you could have done was to take out the 27th row. With the extra room, you've made a good traveling experience great."
— Joanne Yatkofsky

"I can't tell enough people how much I love your airline." — Elizabeth Alonso

"I honestly think that JetBlue is outstanding! The service is excellent, and they treat you like a human being. I would certainly highly recommend it!"
— Alfred Reyes

"Love the DIRECTV® – keeps kids entertained and it's free!"— James Webb

MUNCHING ON MEXICAN

Queremos Qdoba... Beantown burrito lovers now need only to make a dash for the Prudential Center Food Court to get their Mexican food fix. On April 28, just in time for Cinco de Mayo, Qdoba Mexican Grill, a Colorado-based chain that prides itself on its fast-casual Mexican cuisine, opened the first of 20 locations planned for the Bay State. Is the Pru a little too far from the office for lunch? No worries—by the end of 2004 there will be Qdoba's at Downtown Crossing and around BU and Northeastern. 800 Boylston St., Boston (617-859-9233).

Alcohol and Architects... What happens when the world's oldest brand of vodka and one of the world's most decorated architects get together? No, not indecipherable blueprints and asymmetric skyscrapers. On May 1, Wyborowa—a Polish vodka vendor since 1823—released its new Single Estate vodka in Boston, New York and Los Angeles. While Wyborowa took care of what went into the bottle, the outside was left up to renowned architect Frank Gehry, who fell in love with the project after a visit to the estate and created a sleek, minimalist design of clear glass, strong lines and curves. $30 a bottle, available at Kappy's Liquors, 216 Border St., East Boston (617-567-9500) and Blanchard's Liquors, 103 Harvard Ave., Allston (617-782-5588).

No Carbs for You... Unless you've been living under a rock (or under Keyshawn Johnson's massive ego) for the last couple of years, you know that if you're looking to shed a couple of pounds, it isn't a bad idea to cut down on the carbohydrates in your diet. Pasta? Out. Rolls? Out. The Sheraton Hotel's new Lo-Carb Lifestyle Menu? In. On April 16, the hotel giant launched its Atkins/South Beach diet–friendly menu at 200 of its North American hotels (including Boston). The menu contains such low-starch selections as the Updated Caesar Salad ($8.25, $10.50 w/chicken, 4 grams of carbohydrates), the "No Buns Allowed" Burger ($10.50, 2.2 grams) and the Ultimate Portobello Chicken Burger ($11.50, 2.9 grams). 39 Dalton St., Boston (617-236-2000).

Starbucks' new sandwiches

Starbucks Surprise... When Starbucks announced the launch of its new line of sandwiches and salads, we were skeptical. Was this the next New Coke, Crystal Pepsi, or McRib—another misguided case of overexpansion? But an officewide taste test pretty much left us with egg on our face—or rather turkey, mustard and pepperoncini. The sandwiches were good. Mozzarella with roasted tomatoes on ciabatta was fresh and tasty, like homemade, and the Italian combo was served on focaccia bread from Iggy's. Even more surprising are the prices: $4.50–$5.50—not much more than a venti latte. Look for the sandwiches and salads (eight total) at select Starbucks locations. —E.H., J.I. and Rich Levine

MAKING TRACKS

An ambitious project is under way two hours from Boston, in Tamworth, N.H. Club Motorsports Inc.'s Valley Motorsports Park will include a 150,000-square foot clubhouse, a hotel, and most importantly, a 3.3–mile road course. The facility runs on the country-club business model—drivers pay an initiation fee plus monthly dues for track time. Initiation fees range from $4,500 to $22,000 depending on the level of membership, and prices are ramping up as the projected opening date in late summer/early fall approaches. So if you've got a need for speed, here's a good way to get it out of your system without meeting any more of Massachusetts' finest. Go to www.clubmotorsports.com for more information. —Ezra Dyer

Italian Interiors... If you're in the market for a new kitchen, and money is no object, Arclinea in Boston's Design District might be worth a look. The luxe Italian kitchenaire's flagship U.S. store, which opened in February, features an imported collection of custom-made stainless steel and marble-topped ranges by design heavy and Italian architect Antonio Citterio. Displayed exclusively at the Boston showroom is the Convivium kitchen model (yours for a tidy $80,000-$130,000). Another exclusive is a Todd English recipe for Parmesan pudding with sweet pea sauce, handwritten on the store's 15-foot chalkboard by the celeb chef himself. 10 St. James Ave., Boston (617-357-9777). www.arclineaboston.com.

What's My Name Again?... After a year-long identity crisis, the folks at Boylston Street's Rattlesnake Bar and Grill (which briefly went by the name George: An American Tavern) have discovered the meaning in the old adage "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." The Tex-Mex tavern's reincarnation as George was, well, underwhelming to Rattlesnake fans. Management finally chucked the idea and reintroduced a new and improved Rattlesnake on April 15, with the rockin' roof deck still intact. "There was such a clamor to bring back the Rattlesnake that we couldn't ignore the issue," says co-owner Craig Davignon. "The response has been so positive, we've been busy every night since we've been open." Colorful murals and a casual atmosphere have replaced George's understated, uptight decor, and East Coast Grill's Chris Schlesinger spiced up the menu with his signature pan-Latin dishes. 384 Boylston St., Boston (617-859-7772).

The rugs, seven in total, were woven by Jamaica Plain fiber artist Claudia Mills and will be either auctioned online or raffled off at CraftBoston's art show at the World Trade Center May 21-23. www.craftboston.org. —E.H., J.I., Courtney Hollands and Ezra Dyer.

GOOGLE EYED

There's nothing like an Internet self-search to confirm you're just another Yahoo

Despite my fascination with myself, I don't make a habit of self-Googling. Like looking down at the world from a plane, Google makes you realize how insignificant you are. But I was still surprised when I gave it a try recently and found out just how many other Ezra Dyers showed up for the Google party.

Roughly half the Internet appears to be devoted to genealogy pages, which baffles me. Why do so many people care where they came from? My aunt once told me that my relatives go back to the Mayflower, which means that I ought to go apologize to the nearest Native American. Thanks for teaching my ancestors about fertilizer; sorry about the smallpox and alcoholism.

Google tells me there were lots of Ezra Dyers round these parts back in the 1800s. For instance, Dr. Ezra Dyer reported on a case of traumatic paralysis at the New England Ophthalmological Society meeting in the Back Bay in 1885. Wow, you must've been pretty smart, Dr. Dyer! Too bad you're now talkin' topthology with the worms!

A religious site has a story about Ezra Dyer. Or, more accurately, Ezra the Wool-Dyer: "When Jesus had spoken his words of commentary on the Scripture the whole assembly in the Synagogue fell into silence. But one person alone did not remain silent. Seated near the back of the synagogue, the man quietly began to cry. Many turned their heads to see who it was who was weeping. And they saw that it was Ezra, the Wool-Dyer." The point of this story, according to the site, is that "the story of Ezra the Wool-Dyer provides us with a glimpse of how Eternity breaks into time." What's left unexplained is why Ezra the Wool-Dyer is such a pussy. Crying right there in the synagogue? This Ezra the Crier is hurting my tough, manly image. I'm going to tell Google this site is spamming me with dog porn and get it delisted. I'm glad I found out about this.

Ezra Dyer was also a big-shot lawyer in Oklahoma in the 1940s, while Ezra H. Dyer served as an officer with the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States in Missouri during the Civil War. Way to go, Ezra H. Dyer! I was going to be bummed if you were a Confederate, but it appears you fought nobly against your slave-owning, toothless, inbred Missouri brethren (apologies to readers whose Google genealogy results show that they're descended from toothless, inbr Missouri Confederates). Ezra H. Dyer, i ever get interested in history and becom incredibly lame, I'm going to play you in Civil War reenactment.

There were also lots of close matches the Ezra Dyer search, such as an excer from The Maddest Idea by James L. Nelso This novel about the American Navy du ing the Revolutionary War features a cha acter named Ezra Rumstick, who is qui the salty dog: "Rumstick followed his ga out toward Dyer Island. 'Men die in wa Isaac,' he said after a pause. 'They w men-of-war's men, and they made choice.'" Ezra, that is the saltiest dialog this side of Captain Ahab or my leg's n made of wood. Your grammar is appallin but I'm sure I'd want you on my side duri a naval battle or clichéd sentiment co test, you big fictional galoot.

Another interesting find was the "De Uncle Ezra" advice column on Corn University's Web site. Dear Uncle Ezra written by Cornell founder Ezra Corn whose advice-dispensing credibility called into question by the fact that died in 1874. For instance, one pare writes to Uncle Ezra and asks why t school doesn't offer more alternatives drinking. Uncle Ezra responds that the are plenty of other things to do in Itha besides drink. For instance, students c "swim and use the gymnasiums for baske ball, volleyball and badminton, or sign for countless intramural sports, from so cer to innertube waterpolo." Uncle Ez you're so out of touch. Everyone kno that you only play innertube waterpo when you're totally wasted! Perhaps t parent should ask Uncle Ezra to set daughter up with the guy who asked wh steps he could take to improve his stu habits. I'm sure he knows where the ba minton court is. iB

Death to George

The following is an editorial from "the Committee to Bring Back the Rattlesnake Bar"

One year ago the "Rattlesnake Bar and Grill" the most exciting and fun bar and in the Back Bay was changed to George: An American Tavern. This was not due to change in ownership, but rather from the idiocy and misguidance of one of the owners. A man named Gordon Wilcox who felt he was a visionary in the restaurant field. His ideas, however proved to be as outdated as the powder blue, double knit tuxedo that he wore to Spinazzola last month and about as sharp as the 1½ star chef that he hired to create the menu. The result was a place as boring as Mr. Wilcox's personal life.

Convinced to seek therapy, Mr. Wilcox has been shipped off to Saratoga, N.Y. to watch the horseys run round and round leaving his partners to make appropriate changes and to apologize to all the loyal customers they have had over the years.

Effective mid-April, the new and improved Rattlesnake Bar opens and promises good times to all, featuring: exotic drinks, a rooftop bar, Budweiser, a private room and a menu created by Chris Schlesinger and his chefs at the East Coast Grill.

They hope to see you this spring.

JEFF TAYLOR

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Monster.com founder Jeff Taylor was born and raised in the Boston area and received his undergraduate degree from UMass Amherst. In the fall of 1993, while operating his own recruitment ad agency, the idea for Monster came to him in a dream. (The name is a reference to a client who told Taylor, "No more big ideas. I want a monster idea.") Monster was one of the first dot-com success stories and has grown into a global network serving more than 16 million visitors, in 21 countries, monthly. A frequent speaker at colleges, universities and professional conferences, Taylor has an honorary doctorate from Bentley College and serves on the boards of Junior Achievement and the Wang Center for the Performing Arts. In addition to guest DJing at area nightclubs and restoring classic cars, he became the Blimp Waterskiing World Champion in 2000. He lives with his wife and children in Newton.

Jonathan Soroff: The monster on the logo—is that you?

Jeff Taylor: The eyes, the fangs…yes.

JS: How many of your former employees would you guess used Monster.com to get a better job?

JT: Maybe 50, over 10 years. But I encourage my employees to put their résumés on Monster, because if I can't earn the opportunity of having them work for me, I don't deserve to have them.

JS: You've reinvented the workforce and the process of leaving a job you're not happy in. Is there still such a thing as long-term company loyalty?

JT: I think company loyalty is at risk, but loyalty to a boss, or your team, is as strong, if not stronger, than ever. I also think the number-one reason people leave a job is because of their boss. Even though the reasons people cite are things like more pay or a shorter commute, it's really all about the boss, and the relationship with the employee.

JS: How do you feel when an employee leaves?

JT: Absolute disappointment if it's somebody I think is great for the company, and I fight it. I don't just let the person walk out the door.

JS: So how do you turn that situation around?

JT: I've kept maybe a hundred people from leaving my company by listening. Usually, they're looking for opportunities or challenges they don't feel the company's providing, and a lot of times I've been able to find those things for them. Also, by following through on promises that maybe the company had made and never delivered on. Ultimately, I've challenged their thought-process on the new job that they were going to. Someone who's going to sell snowplow blades isn't gonna change the world, whereas with what we do, they really can change the world.

THE NUMBER ONE REASON PEOPLE LEAVE A JOB IS BECAUSE OF THEIR BOSS. EVEN THOUGH THEY CITE THINGS LIKE MORE PAY OR A SHORTER COMMUTE, IT'S REALLY ALL ABOUT THE BOSS.

JS: Worst job you ever had?

JT: When I was probably 14, I was a dishwasher at a big steak and drinking place in Newton, and my job was to dump those barrels full of old alcohol and whatever into the trash, in this narrow alley. It was disgusting. And the owner didn't know my name, so he called me something like "Frank."

JS: Best job you ever had?

JT: This one. Even though I sold my company back in 1995, I love being able to lead the charge. I've dedicated my life to helping people love their jobs.

JS: But doesn't your company actually promote job dissatisfaction by holding out the promise that there's something better out there?

JT: I think it's more likely that we're not the cause; we're the effect. The cause is that you already don't like your job. You can then effectively go to Monster.

JS: Worst way to quit a job?

JT: A fight with the boss—"F you!" "F you!"—and then walk out the door, slamming it behind you.

JS: How long should someone stay in a job?

JT: As long as they're learning something.

JS: What's too soon to quit?

JT: I'd quit after one day if the job wasn't right.

JS: Biggest lie you've ever seen on a résumé?

JT: I think the word "consultant" is the most abused. Someone doesn't have a job for three years—they're always consultants.

JS: Single best piece of advice for someone who's been out of a job for a long time?

JT: You have got to go look for a job. I find people who are out of work and haven't even done a résumé yet. They keep kinda hoping that some beautiful opportunity will land in their lap. I'm all for "Work hard, play hard," but if you're unemployed, it's a "work hard" scenario.

JS: Strangest job you've ever listed on Monster?

JT: Mortician. Home Shopping Channel announcer. There have been a few, although we're fairly mainstream. There's lots of kinda fringe jobs but nothing that bizarre. The more exotic stuff is something like being a grip on a movie.

JS: How do you stop someone from trying to hire someone to do something illegal?

JT: One of the most difficult things in our business is controlling those kind of "work from home" type jobs. What amazes me is these scams where someone asks you to send $100 along with your maiden name, college ID and three friends' Social Security numbers. And people do it!

JS: OK, write a help wanted ad for president of the United States.

JT: Let's see. Job title: Leader of the free world. Requirements: 20 years' experience in related field with progressive track record. Minimum of one year's experience in politics. Actually having survived all 12 months a plus.

JS: So are you addicted to the TV show The Apprentice?

JT: I've watched it twice. I thought it was a little slow. I saw the first episode, and one of my main thought was that my view of women in the workplace is a b more advanced.

JS: Who would you rather work for: Donald Trump or Martha Stewart?

JT: Martha Stewart. Real e tate doesn't particularly in terest me from a busines perspective. Martha Stew art's been an incredibl brand presence. It's one o the things I admire abou the empire that she's built. also think that in the way approach staff and employ ees, I could be an interestin partner to her.

JS: One thing on a résumé that makes someone irresistible?

JT: Great skills and progres sive experience. I think was Calvin Coolidge wh said something about persistence taking th place of any education. It shows on your r sumé. If there's a development of skills, yo can see it.

JS: So having a Harvard M.B.A. isn't the sexiest thing in the world?

JT: Well, getting an M.B.A. or finishing co lege are progressive experiences. They' chapters in your life and they add up to story. So the more chapters you create, th more interesting you are to an employer.

JS: Most egregiously underpaid profession?

JT: Teachers. I've got three kids and it's ju incredible how much a really great teach can impact someone's life. I don't thin that's reflected in their compensation. Aft that, I'd say a really great DJ. They can r ally make a club happen and they general don't get the recognition they deserve.

JS: What if one of your kids came to you an said he wanted to be the guy who sweeps up behind the elephants in the circus?

JT: I'd say, "Get a big broom." If that's wh made him happy, I'd say, "Go for it."

JS: Three secrets for a successful job interview

JT: Research. Dress to kill. And walking knowing you already have the job. Effe tively, pretty much anyone coming in for a interview has the skills required to get th job, so most people spend the whole ho talking themselves out of the job. I think lot of people also think that what they we doesn't matter, and I think that what yo wear is part of the impression you make the first 15 seconds, which is very impo tant. As for research, most people don have any idea about the company, or th position, or the opportunity, and they into the interview without being prepared

JS: Last question: How often do you hear some version of "You've created a monster!"

JT: I hear some bad pun every day. IB

SHOW THEM THE MONEY

Players get a bum rap from fans and media

The world of a professional athlete is like no other. Dealing with sports divas daily, that was an essential lesson to learn early in my career. It's as pointless to compare your status in life against that of say, Manny Ramirez ($20 million a year), as it would be to envy Donald Trump.

I often wonder why people try to hold athletes to a different standard when it comes to earning a living. How many professionals from all walks of life are criticized for trying to make more money? I'll tell you how many: none.

The art of the deal is something to marvel at until that person is a professional athlete, be they a flame-throwing pitcher (see Pedro Martinez) or a crafty and rugged defensive back (see Ty Law). The words "greed" and "selfish" quickly come up.

Let's take Law, for example. The Patriots star, who is considered one of the best cornerbacks in the world, has taken more fire than the O.J. jury for his comment, "I gotta eat." The bottom line that's being missed in all of this is the fact that the Patriots wanted to cut Law's contract. Here was the Super Bowl–winning cornerback, fresh off three interceptions in the AFC championship game, coming off a career year. But because of the stupid system in place, the Patriots wanted to cut his pay.

So what happens? We—the media and fans—harp on the "I gotta eat" comment. That's a cheap shot. He obviously didn't mean it that way. What he meant was he wanted his money, which he deserved.

People bring up how much teachers and YMCA counselors make. But that's not the issue. The issue is that one of the best individuals in the country at his craft doesn't want to get paid less money than he's worth. Period.

Wasn't this country founded on the principles of capitalism and earning fair market value? Is it too much to pay $10 million for a guy to throw a baseball? Probably. But that's the going rate. Is it right to pay some Fortune 500 executive a $25 million bonus when his company loses money? I don't hear anybody complaining about that one.

What you need to remember is that these guys are the best in the world at what they do. In just about any business, if you can stake a claim to being the best in your field, you're going to get paid like it. And when it's time for a raise, you'd be best served to use any means possible to negotiate.

Now on to Pedro Martinez. He's a light ning rod if I ever saw one. Pedro is earnin $17.5 million this year, and next year he's free agent. He says he will go to the tea that makes him the best offer.

Oh my God! Have that man arrested.

What do people expect him to say? I another city out there he'd rather live i

It's up to the Red Sox whether Pedro

IS $10 MILLION TOO MUCH TO PAY A GUY TO THROW A BASEBALL? PROBABLY BUT THAT'S THE GOING RATE. IF THERE IS MONEY TO BE MADE—AND WE KNOW THERE'S A LITTLE BIT IN PRO SPORTS—WHY SHOULDN'T THE ATHLETES REAP IT?

Bostonians have plenty to bitch about. The driving sucks. The weather sucks. The cost of living is at the ridiculous end of the spectrum, and the odds of catching a cab when you really need one are infinity-to-one.

So why live here?

It's a question we ask ourselves often, or at least every time some knucklehead makes the inevitable but stunningly irrelevant comparison with New York. (Memo to them: Yes, you're right. This isn't New York. It's not Tokyo or Srinagar, either.)

Whatever its faults, Boston has plenty going for it—history, charm, enough decent hospitals to minimize the likelihood of dying from Ebola—and its assets far outweigh such liabilities as the chronic case of coitus interruptus we've suffered at the hands of every major sports team except the Patriots.

Not to sound like a press release from the Chamber of Commerce, but we love this city. How? We decided to count the ways.

What we realized was that if Julie Andrews had been singing about Boston in "My Favorite Things," The Sound of Music would be as long as Wagner's Ring Cycle. The list of reasons to love Boston goes on and on, and ours is by no means exhaustive. It's a start, though, and something to keep in mind the next time you find yourself wondering how you wound up here or why you continue to stay.

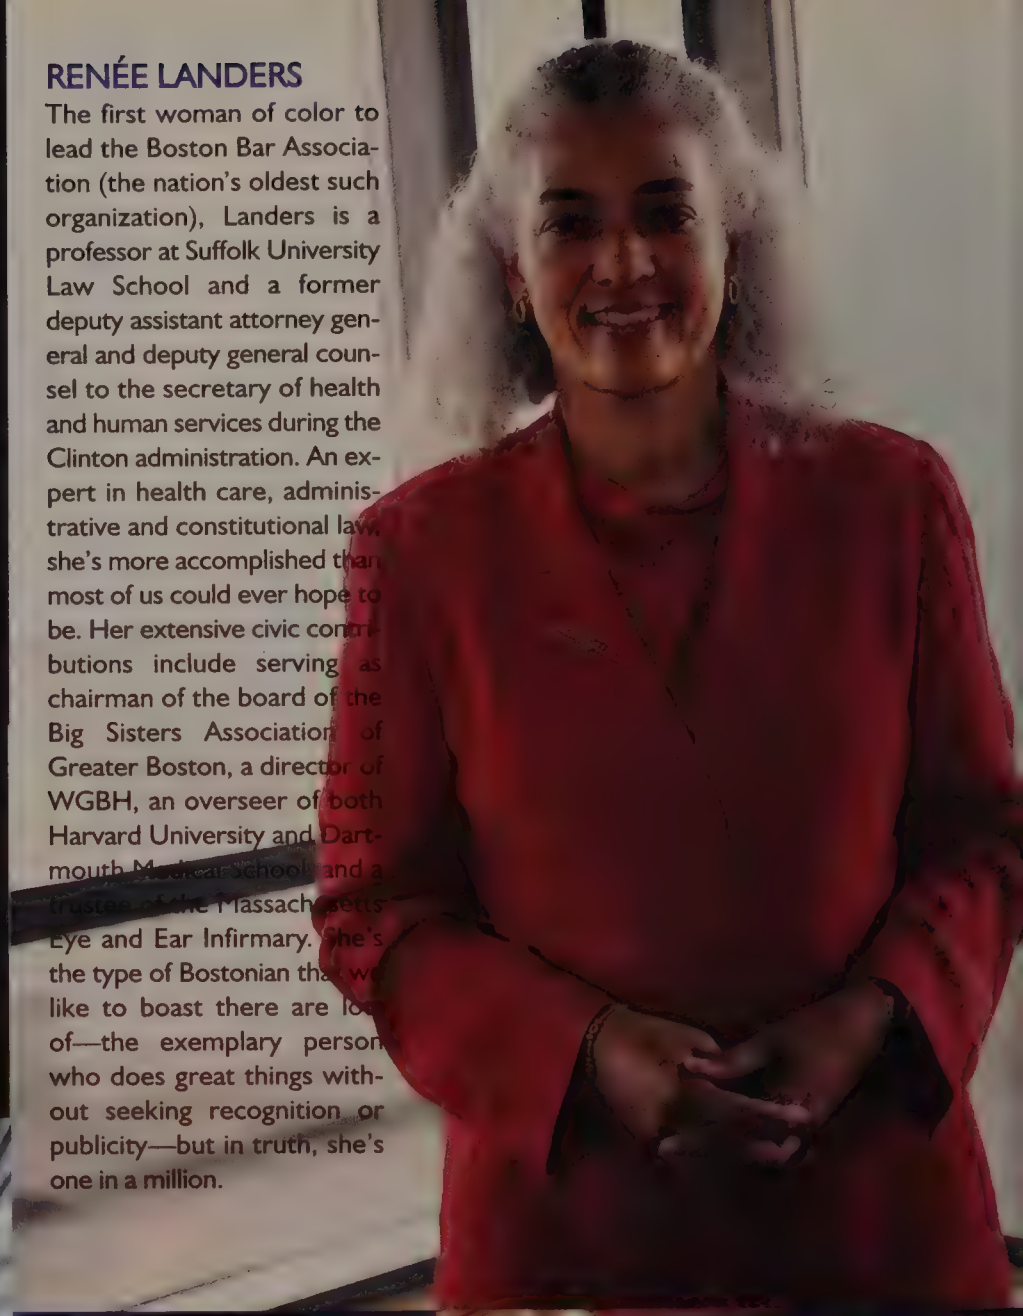
ADAM VINATIERI

After the Red Sox' heart-crushing exit from the ALCS playoffs last year, the city needed a reason for a little sporting cheer. That was provided in spades by the New England Patriots, who began a remarkable 15-game winning streak back when the Red Sox were still battling Oakland. That run culminated in the Pats' second Super Bowl title in three years, and the second to be clinched by an Adam Vinatieri field goal. "For those of us who are big sports fans, we'll always see him kicking the Super Bowl winners with all the flashbulbs going off," says Patriots owner Bob Kraft. "Adam's made 17 game-winning kicks in eight years. I don't think there's anything more comforting than seeing Adam Vinatieri walk out on the field when the game's on the line. He's a wonderful young man, and we're proud to have him represent the team and our family, both on and off the field." And while the Patriots place great emphasis on the team philosophy, the kicker position is an inherently individual role. Despite that, Boston Globe sportswriter Michael Holley says Vinatieri's one of the guys. "He defies the stereotype of a kicker as an aloof, peripheral part of the team," Holley says. "He's a football player who just happens to be a kicker."



THE SAUSAGE GUY ON LANSDOWNE STREET

It's usually not a good thing to say you can smell someone from a mile away, but in the case of Dave Littlefield, aka the Sausage Guy, it's, in fact, a compliment. As soon as you leave the bleacher seats at Fenway or stumble out of a nightclub onto Lansdowne Street, it hits you: the heady scent of grilling meat, onions and peppers. By the time the Sausage Guy's pushcart heaves into view, your salivary glands have hijacked your better judgment and you're ordering one with everything on it. Even some vegetarians we know have grown weak-kneed with desire. Furthermore, the friendly patter Littlefield serves up with each sandwich makes the experience that much more gratifying. Forgive the groan-worthy pun, but we swear: You never sausage a guy!

NOAM CHOMSKY

The father of modern linguistics is such a genius that Nobel Prize winners have trouble following what he's trying to say. Chomsky's C.V. reads like a greatest hits of higher education: UPenn undergrad and grad school, a fellowship at Harvard, stints at Princeton's Institute for Advanced Study and as a lecturer at English universities Oxford and Cambridge, and decades of distinguished service on the faculty of MIT. He has written and lectured on topics including philosophy, intellectual history, modern culture, international affairs and U.S. foreign policy, and the awards and honors that have been heaped upon him include being named a fellow of the National Academy of Science and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. Among brainiacs the world over, "Chomsky says…" is synonymous with intellectual cred, and he lives right here in our midst. Now we know how the folks in Jersey felt when Einstein was their neighbor.

RENÉE LANDERS

The first woman of color to lead the Boston Bar Association (the nation's oldest such organization), Landers is a professor at Suffolk University Law School and a former deputy assistant attorney general and deputy general counsel to the secretary of health and human services during the Clinton administration. An expert in health care, administrative and constitutional law, she's more accomplished than most of us could ever hope to be. Her extensive civic contributions include serving as chairman of the board of the Big Sisters Association of Greater Boston, a director of WGBH, an overseer of both Harvard University and Dartmouth Medical School and a trustee of the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary. She's the type of Bostonian that we like to boast there are lots of—the exemplary person who does great things without seeking recognition or publicity—but in truth, she's one in a million.

MARY RICHARDSON

As co-host of WCVB-TV 5's Chronicle, a program that celebrates, navigates and elucidates all things New England, Richardson's like a tour guide, critic, concierge and best friend to her rabidly loyal fan base. Perky without being cloying, she has real journalistic cojones; as a TV reporter, she once tracked members of the Manson family to their apartment and scored an interview. Whether she's reporting a tear-jerking feature on homelessness or fluff like the romantic inns of the White Mountains, her delivery never seems forced or disingenuous. In a business of personalities who seem attractive on-air and are unpleasant once the cameras are off, Richardson's the antithesis of a diva: warm, genuine, smart, interesting and interested. If Chronicle were a national show, she'd be America's sweetheart, but the fact that it's the only local nightly TV news magazine left makes her our very own.

ROBERT B. PARKER

No one has done more to immortalize Boston in print than the prolific Parker. The dean of American detective fiction, he's the rightful heir to Hammett and Chandler (whom, perhaps not coincidentally, he wrote about in his doctoral thesis). Since the first Spenser novel appeared, in 1971, Parker's tough but erudite detective has transcended two-dimensional gumshoe status to become an American literary icon. Meanwhile, the popular TV show he inspired not only made Boston look fabulous but also rescued Robert Urich's career from the indignity of having starred as Dan Tanna in Vegas. That Parker has also found time to pen a western and a series of mysteries involving female P.I. Sunny Randall, as well as run an independent TV and film production company, is nothing short of astonishing. Furthermore, the philanthropic generosity shown by him and his wife, Joan, prove that under his gruff exterior there's a warm and fuzzy center.

LENNY CLARKE

Quite simply, the guy is piss-your-pants funny, whether he's doing his stand-up act at one of the local comedy clubs his brother owns, appearing in the latest Farrelly brothers movie, or playing a Southie bar owner on ABC's Archie Bunker–meets–La Cage Aux Folles sitcom, It's All Relative. A Cambridge native, Clarke once ran for mayor while working in the city's sanitation department, and one can't help but think how much better off, or at least funnier, the People's Republic might be if he'd gotten elected. His wife, Jennifer, meanwhile, is not only one of Martha's Vineyard's best charter-boat captains and a champion fisher-woman but a singer and songwriter as well, further upping Clarke's cool quotient. A master of the intelligent rant, he's a latter-day Jackie Gleason. We defy anyone who's ever seen him perform not to crack a smile as soon as he appears.

HOMETOWN PRIDE

INTERVIEWS BY JESSICA IREDALE

Now that you know why we think our city's so great, we thought it only fair to include a few more opinions. We asked 12 of our notable neighbors to tell us what they love about Boston. Here they explain what makes them proud of their city and happy to stay put.

"I love the city's passion for its sports teams. It's incredible to play in front of sold-out crowds every night at Fenway, whether it's a cold night in April or a classic New England evening in July. The passion in Boston is tremendous, which is really the key thing about playing here."

—Jason Varitek, catcher, Boston Red Sox

"Probably what I love most about Boston is its diversity in every regard. From architecture, old and contemporary, to the amazing array of culture—we speak 140 different languages in Boston—resources, food and vegetation, it's just a wonderful diversity. I think this city has an amazing presence in terms of the world of intellect and ideas, writers and publishing, and all of those things that I think are a pretty essential part of what my training as a librarian is about. Bottom line: I like Boston, I like the people here and I like the natural and the built environment that make up this great city."

—Bernie Margolis, president, Boston Public Library

"The bars. I've been in literally thousands of bars across the country, and Boston has a great bar culture. You can strike up a conversation and feel at home, even if you're a Yankees fan."

—Jim Koch, brewer, Samuel Adams

"Tough question. There is so much to love. The cultural life, of course, the rich traditions and strong and diverse cultural offerings. The diversity of the people and the influences on life here. The great restaurants. The sports, and the fanatical devotion to our teams. The beauty of the city, and the fact that so much natural beauty lies right next door, in every direction. The fact that I'm a Northeast guy at heart, and I feel very at home here. Gertrude Stein (I think) once said, disparagingly, about another city, "There's no there there." There's a lot of there here! I can't think of another city in the country that I would be prouder to call home. And did I mention the Boston Pops?"

—Keith Lockhart, conductor, Boston Pops

"It's hard to pick the one thing I love most. Because I'm a Gemini, I'll pick two. First, the people: direct, funny and outgoing. We may love to lay on our horns, but we're really pretty friendly. And then there's the city itself. Between the scenery and the architecture, this is one beautiful, walkable city. Patriots' Day always makes me proud to be a Bostonian. I love that it's a historic, citywide party capped off with the drama of the marathon and the suspense of the Sox game. It always seems like the first real day of spring. What keeps me here? My fella, my friends, the fact that Boston just feels like home...and the basil gimlets at Via Matta!"

—Lisa Hughes, news anchor, CBS-TV 4 News

"Growing up in New Jersey gave me a permanent affection for places where people brag in a kind of reverse way: Our weather is worse than yours, our politicians more deplorable, our car insurance system is more messed up, our scandals are greater. Like New Jersey, Boston also has good, American ethnic mixes and hybrids and a tradition of superior fast food (fried clams, hot dogs, pizza). And as a childhood Brooklyn Dodgers fan, I have hated the Yankees forever. This is a great community for poetry. My close friends and neighbors include Frank Bidart, David Ferry, Louise Glück, Lloyd Schwartz, Gail Mazur, Tom Sleigh, Askold Melnyczuk—friendships going back decades. When we were all puppies, Bishop and Lowell were attending readings at the Blacksmith House. Lowell taught Plath and Sexton and Starbuck in the same BU classroom where Derek Walcott, Rosanna Warren, Leslie Epstein, Ha Jin and I teach our classes now. In other words: people, and memories of people."

—Robert Pinsky, former U.S. poet laureate

"Boston is a vibrant city of neighborhoods—I've traveled a great deal in recent years, and as a result, appreciate home more than ever. It's also a very safe city compared with most. The fact that we're recognized internationally for our community policing initiatives. The quality of life. While there is always room for improvement, I haven't visited another city that's as clean, vibrant, safe and community oriented."

—Kathleen O'Toole, commissioner, Boston Police Department

"It's the overwhelming self-confidence of the people who live here. You can see it in the rotaries as you drive. People know that they're more important than you. Therefore, they often pull out right in front of your car. Or at traffic lights. As soon as the light hints at turning green, bam! Those fists are all over the horn. Because the city is brimming with VIPs, they can't be expected to wait. You can even see this confidence when you're out walking. Nobody says hello because, heck, they're just too good for that silliness. The self-confidence of Bostonians is refreshing."

—Christopher Muther, columnist, The Boston Globe

"What I enjoy most about this city are its cultural offerings: theater, museums and, of course, great restaurants! What keeps me here is my wonderful circle of friends, many that I met in college. Some of my friends and I are part of a wine group called Divas Uncorked that sponsors wine dinners and educational forums for women interested in learning about wine. I would be more proud of Boston if the powers that be in the city did more to change the culture by reaching out to people of color to make sure that they are included in every level of Boston society—from affordable housing to good jobs and education—and to welcome them fully in Boston's sometimes closed social circles."

—Karen Holmes Ward, executive producer and host, CityLine on WCVB-TV 5

"The many different accents that are spoken here, even within a 20-mile radius: 'Ya wan mustahd wit dat hutdug, bubby?' It's always fun to quickly figure out if someone is from Everett or Somerville. That I'm not a typical Bostonian and I really love sex! The deep roots of established friendships. And three seasons out of the year: spring, summer and fall. That's why I winter in Los Angeles now."

—Kim Airs, owner, Grand Opening

"I love that there's so much art and entertainment in the city. It's enough that you can feel a part of it versus being overwhelmed by it in New York. I'm proud to be a Bostonian because gays can get married in our state. I'm here because it is a city you can live in and make a contribution to the art scene."

—Joe Zina, executive director, Coolidge Corner Theatre

"Well, I guess the stock or more boring answer would be its proximity to the New England states. I'm a Cape Cod lover, a Maine lover and a Vermont lover. To me, it's the greatest place to be in the country. Look what we have around us. I love the size of our city. It doesn't swallow you up. You can actually walk down the streets and bump into people you know all the time. When I drive to work in the morning, I invariably see someone I know. Obviously, I love the fish, and now we have great farmers who grow specialty items for us chefs. I love the seasons. I wait all year long for football season to start so I can load up my fireplace with wood and cook for my friends on Sunday and have a fire. I love our mayor. I think he's the greatest mayor in the country because he loves to eat. Bostonians are great eaters. I think Boston's a beautiful city. Every day, when I look out over the Public Gardens from Excelsior, that's pretty special."

—Lydia Shire, chef/owner, Excelsior and Locke-Ober

REALITY TV CONTESTANTS

Boston seems to produce an inordinate number of reality cast members, from "Boston Rob" of CBS's Survivor: All Stars to the losers on Average Joe—Brian G., Brian W. and Justin. One might argue that our contribution to TV's perverse voyeuristic streak is a dubious distinction at best, but when you think about it, what's more American than eavesdropping on your neighbors? Watching people make jackasses of themselves is much more fun when you live next door to them or know you might bump into them in a bar. Bonus points for the fact that Omarosa Manigault-Stallworth (the one everybody loved to hate on The Apprentice) isn't from here.

MBTA CONDUCTOR PAUL GERRISH

Anything that mitigates the aggravation of commuting via public transportation merits our admiration, and Gerrish, a three-year veteran of the T, does just that. As a conductor on the C branch of the Green Line, which travels from Cleveland Circle in Brookline to Government Center, via Beacon Street, Gerrish keeps up a steady patter of infotainment, offering somewhat goofy monologues that combine announcements of the stops with jokes and bits of useful news. Miraculously, this isn't as annoying as it sounds; rather than irritating his riders, he soothes frayed nerves and rarely fails to put a smile on everyone's face. Not bad, when you consider that the only available entertainment on most mass transit is the ads for suicide hotlines and personal-injury lawyers.

VIVIEN LI

More than any other person, Li deserves credit for cleaning up Boston Harbor. Before she became executive director of the Boston Harbor Association, the harbor was bordering on being an open sewer. Today, 90 percent of the city's ocean beaches are swimmable for 90 percent of the summer, and Li vows to improve on that. The harbor is the centerpiece that Boston was originally built upon, and it's once again teeming with life, both aquatic and recreational. By combining the tenacity of a social activist, the pie-in-the-sky idealism of a visionary and the exacting standards of an environmentalist, she's returned one of the city's most precious resources to good working order.

THE ISABELLA STEWART GARDNER MUSEUM

The mark of a truly great house museum—whether it's the Frick in New York or the Peggy Guggenheim in Venice—is how compellingly it reflects the quirks and eccentricities of the personality that created it. On that score, the Gardner has them all beat. The headstrong daughter of a rich New York dry-goods merchant, Isabella Stewart married Brahmin scion John "Jack" Gardner in 1860 and then spent the next 60 years scandalizing Boston society with such outlandish behavior as wearing diamond antennae in her hair, walking a lion on a leash down Boylston Street, and practicing Buddhism. Before she died, she completed her folie de grandeur, a Venetian palazzo in what was then a questionable part of town. She stuffed it with art treasures she collected and willed it to the people of Boston with the stipulation that nobody could touch a thing. The result is a museum where some of the world's greatest masterpieces (Titian's Europa) hang alongside some absolute crap (or at least work of considerably less artistic merit). A lovable lunatic, Gardner gave the city one of its greatest assets.

THE BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY READING ROOM

Proof that civilization is good for something, the BPL's Bates Hall is one of the many public spaces that make us proud to be from Boston. The stunningly beautiful, grand and imposing room—named for Joshua Bates, the library's first private benefactor—is one of several attractions housed in the magnificent edifice. After spending some time here, visitors can marvel at the library's other treasures: the gorgeous murals painted by John Singer Sargent, a rare-books collection that houses curiosities like a first edition Shakespeare folio and the personal correspondence of John Quincy Adams, and the central courtyard, an oasis where the soothing splashing of fountains drowns out the noises of downtown. One of the chief reasons Boston warrants the nickname "the Athens of America."

THE PUBLIC GARDEN

In Paris, there's the Tuileries. In Rome, Tivoli. Mexico City has Chapultepec Park. For our money though, there's no prettier green space in the world than the little gem that connects the Boston Common to the Comm. Ave. Mall. It's picturesque at any time of year—the flowers in warm weather are breathtakingly spectacular, while the place retains an icy beauty during winter months. The Public Garden also earns bonus points for being home to two of the city's most beloved attractions: the Swan Boats and the Make Way for Ducklings statues. Like stepping into a fairy tale, right in your own backyard.

HARVARD SQUARE

Before you start whining that Harvard Square is in Cambridge, not Boston, let's get one thing straight: Cambridge is really just an outcropping of Boston. In fact, when Harvard was founded, the area surrounding it was referred to simply as "the new land" until—lacking a sense of urgency or originality—our forefathers named the land for an English university town and were done with it. Today, visitors to Boston invariably feel the need to make a pilgrimage across the river and see for themselves the ivy-clad towers of America's most prestigious university. And while we'll admit that we enjoy the bragging rights of proximity to this educational status symbol, the parts of Harvard Square we like the best are the buskers, oddball retailers like Out of Town News, the greasy spoons and the punks who hang out in the Pit. Certainly, the Square isn't what it used to be, but accusations that it's been turned into a theme park or minimall are alarmist. It's still got the funk.

ENWAY PARK

o put it in anatomical terms: If Boston were a person, enway Park would be a vital organ. Plenty of people ould argue, more specifically, it's Boston's heart—and a essimist would point out that since 1918 it's given us othing but heartache. The fact remains, however, that enway belongs alongside the Colosseum in Rome and ie playing fields of Eton as one of the most storied venues the history of sport. Its dominant feature is the Green onster, which has been green only since 1947 (before at, the left-field wall was awash in advertisements). oday, the park boasts such charming anachronisms as ne of the few remaining manually operated scoreboards in a pro sports field. (Fun fact: The tribal-looking markings that run down the borders are the names of former owners Thomas and Jean Yawkey spelled out in Morse code.) A misguided attempt at adding luxury seating resulted in the .406 Club (formerly the 600 Club), which has all the charm of a departure lounge in a Midwestern airport, but overall, Fenway looks largely the same as it has since 1912. No other major league ballpark has as much character or is more deserving of landmark status.

THE FREEDOM TRAIL

OK, so it's hokey, and those slow-moving tourists who are mesmerized by the red stripe on the sidewalk and don't watch where they're going are a pain in the ass. But living among so many significant American Revolutionary landmarks is still cool. Philly has that cracked bell and the building where John Hancock got flamboyant with his signature. D.C. has a bunch of big marble and granite things. We've got the buildings, the boats, the steeples and the cobblestones where it all started, not to mention a harbor that hosted the most notorious tea party in history. In fact, there are so many significant landmarks in Boston that it's easy to take them for granted. In any other American city, the spot where the telephone was invented (or anesthesia or the Internet) would be the most historically hallowed ground in town. Here, they have to compete with the Paul Revere House, the Old North Church, the gold dome of the State House and Old Ironsides.

THE HATCH SHELL AND THE ESPLANADE

Even some lifelong Bostonians mistakenly refer to it as "The Half Shell" or "The Hat Shell," but whatever you call it, this outdoor venue for live concerts—most famously the nationally broadcast annual Fourth of July performance by the Boston Pops—adds enormously to our enjoyment of life. So does the park surrounding it. The Charles River Esplanade is one of the truly democratic spaces in the city, used by everyone from princesses to paupers for running, rollerblading, picnicking, sunbathing and general lollygagging. With the stunning views of the boat traffic, the Charles River bridges and the skylines of Cambridge, the Back Bay and Beacon Hill, it's as beautiful as playgrounds get.

THE HARBOR ISLANDS

Underutilized and underappreciated, the 34 islands in Boston Harbor are like miniature versions of Martha's Vineyard, but they're only a short ferry ride from the downtown waterfront. How cool is it to explore a Civil War fort, or camp overnight in a site where you can see both the magnificent clockface of the Customs House Tower and the furry face of a harbor seal? A terrific getaway within spitting distance of the Financial District, the islands in Boston Harbor don't get nearly the props they deserve.

THE NORTH END (AND ITS REATTACHMENT TO THE REST OF THE CITY)

We never thought we'd say it, but the Big Dig might just have been worth it, if only for reuniting the North End with the rest of downtown. Since the 1950s, Boston's version of Little Italy has been like the crazy aunt in the attic: isolated, overlooked and neglected in favor of more accessible neighborhoods like the Back Bay, the South End and Beacon Hill. Now that the elevated eyesore of I-93 is being dismantled, the views both of and from the North End are stunning, and the neighborhood once again feels like it's part of Boston instead of some splinter principality. The only downside to all this, of course, is that it makes carbo-loading on pasta and cannoli that much more tempting and convenient.

SYMPHONY HALL

When Symphony Hall was built, in 1900, Eurocentric snobs pooh-poohed it as a Spartan shoebox with none of the splendor of the great music halls of cities like Vienna and Paris. Well, the joke's on them. Their venues might be dripping with plaster putti and crystal chandeliers, but we've got the most acoustically perfect concert hall in North America, and one of the top three in the world. Our only complaint: The gift shop doesn't sell miniature reproductions of the statues adorning the niches in the wall, surely a missed marketing opportunity if ever there was one.

THE LEONARD P. ZAKIM BUNKER HILL BRIDGE

Design snobs dismiss it as gimmicky, saying the vertical towers mimic the obelisk shape of the Bunker Hill Monument while the triangulated cables echo the sails of the USS Constitution, or some such drivel about it being derivative. Whatever. We love it. The world's widest cable-stayed suspension bridge is an immediate icon, an instant classic and a welcome addition to the city's skyline.

DUNKIN' DONUTS

You can keep your Krispy Kremes. The confection that sends us into paroxysms of ecstasy is a donut from the Randolph-based chain. In fact, for a true Bostonian, there's no greater excuse for ingesting empty calories. Just ask any beat cop where he got his spare tire. The Boston Kreme, in particular, warrants citation as the Most Holy Snack Food of the One True and Apostolic Donut Maker. Of course the coffee's not bad either.

THE FROG POND

So the rink's a bit dinky, and the music can tend toward the anodyne and annoying. Nevertheless, a winter afternoon spent skating in America's oldest public park, with the 19th-century facades of Beacon Street as a backdrop, is like stepping into a Currier & Ives print. One thing Boston does well is twee, and it doesn't get any more twee than this.

FOREST HILLS CEMETERY

Unsung and undiscovered even by many lifelong Boston residents, this "garden cemetery" combines the historic interest of Mount Auburn with the botanic beauty of the Arnold Arboretum and the artistic allure of the Museum of Fine Arts. To wit: Lake Hibiscus, at the center of Forest Hills, is the only lake in the city of Boston; E.E. Cummings is one of the many luminaries buried there; and Forest Hills has the world's second-largest collection of work by master sculptor Daniel Chester French. Special programs, like the exquisitely beautiful and moving, Buddhist-inspired, Lantern Festival every July, add to the appeal. It might seem a bit morbid to hang out in a graveyard, but one visit, and you'll be dying to return.

PRO SPORTS TEAMS

Patriots. Red Sox. Bruins. Celtics. Most of them (Patriots excepted) should be playing with blue balls at this point. But despite the seasonal championship tease, we adore them anyway. What more do we need to say?

BOSTON BALLET

Only a few decades ago, Boston didn't really have its own ballet company. Now it boasts one that's world-class. Despite rumblings of financial woes and a tempest in a teapot over The Nutcracker's eviction from the Wang Center, Boston Ballet is one of the most vibrant arts organizations in the country, presenting consistently excellent dance performances with lavish and eye-catching productions. The dew is barely off the lily for artistic director Mikko Nissenen, but already the impish Finnish impresario has become an integral part of the local arts scene, and he's been true to his word that things are going to keep getting better. It's like that lyric from A Chorus Line: "Everything's beautiful at the ballet." Ain't it the truth.

CLAM CHOWDER

No other regional dish can touch the heavenly perfection of a good bowl of Boston clam chowder. A delicate medley of clams, cream, onions and potatoes, it's hearty, earthy, nourishing and soul-satisfying. Just do us a favor if you're not originally from around here. When you order a cup or a bowl, don't be a wise guy and ask for "chowdah." It makes you sound like a chowdah-head.

OUR ACCENT

Speaking of chowdah…Is there any regional dialect more wicked pissah than a Boston accent? The birthplace of the un-P.C. phrase "What ahhh you, retahded?", Boston has perfected the fine art of dropping post-vocalic r's and adding them where they have absolutely no business being. As a result, we not only get "Pahk the cah in Hahvid Yahd," but phrases like "I ate peetzur in Ayzhur" ("I ate pizza in Asia"). Especially useful for confusing out-of-towners, the Boston accent is all the more precious in that no one who didn't grow up here can even begin to approximate it, as most recently demonstrated by the cast of Mystic River.

FILENE'S BASEMENT

The now-widespread phenomenon of discount retailing began with Filene's, and the Basement is still the best place in the world to find bargains on brand-name stuff. No self-respecting Bostonian would pay top dollar for something they can find here at slash-and-burn prices. Semiregular extravaganzas like the Louis sale or the Bridal Event are Boston's equivalent of the running of the bulls in Pamplona. At this point, the joke's a bit shopworn, but we still hear it regularly: "Where'd you buy that?" "Oh, this fabulous little Italian place—Fellini's Basamente." Saks, schmaks. The Basement appeals to both the fashion plate and the skinflint in all of us. iB

BOSTON MARATHON

Other cities have 26-mile road races. We have the marathon. Although it thoroughly eludes us why anyone would want to run that far (unless they're being chased by an ax-wielding maniac), we welcome the opportunity to spend a Monday afternoon in April standing on a rooftop, drinking beer and shouting till we're hoarse. If a bunch of overachieving athletes want to run themselves to exhaustion, that's their prerogative. We're just thankful for another long weekend and an excuse for hitting the bottle before 5 o'clock.

BY EZRA DYER

ILLUSTRATION BY SCOTT MAGOON

Cambridge has been voted Best Place to Live in America by Modern Hippie magazine. Editors lauded the town's bike lanes and plentiful natural-food stores and the replacement of city waste-disposal services with a giant compost heap in Kendall Square.

Traffic gridlock is worse than ever, as ToyotaDaimlerGM's revolutionary two-dimensional car never managed to pass government crash tests. However, Boston is in the process of doubling the capacity of the Central Artery, having recently begun construction of an elevated highway that will pass over North End Park. The project, dubbed "The Big Frig(gin' Highway)" is already $800 billion over budget.

Mayor Menino, who in 2040 became the country's first-ever cyborg mayor, celebrates his 60th anniversary in office. A ceremony at City Hall Plaza in Menino's honor was hosted by Governor Affleck and featured a performance by Aerosmith.

Fenway Park remains home to the Red Sox, but capacity has increased to 82,000 through the continued addition of seats, including the wildly popular Prudential seats atop the roof of the Prudential Building. With the Sox having won 26 World Series in the past 50 years, the chant "Red Sox suck!" has become a familiar refrain at New York sporting events, concerts and bar mitzvahs.

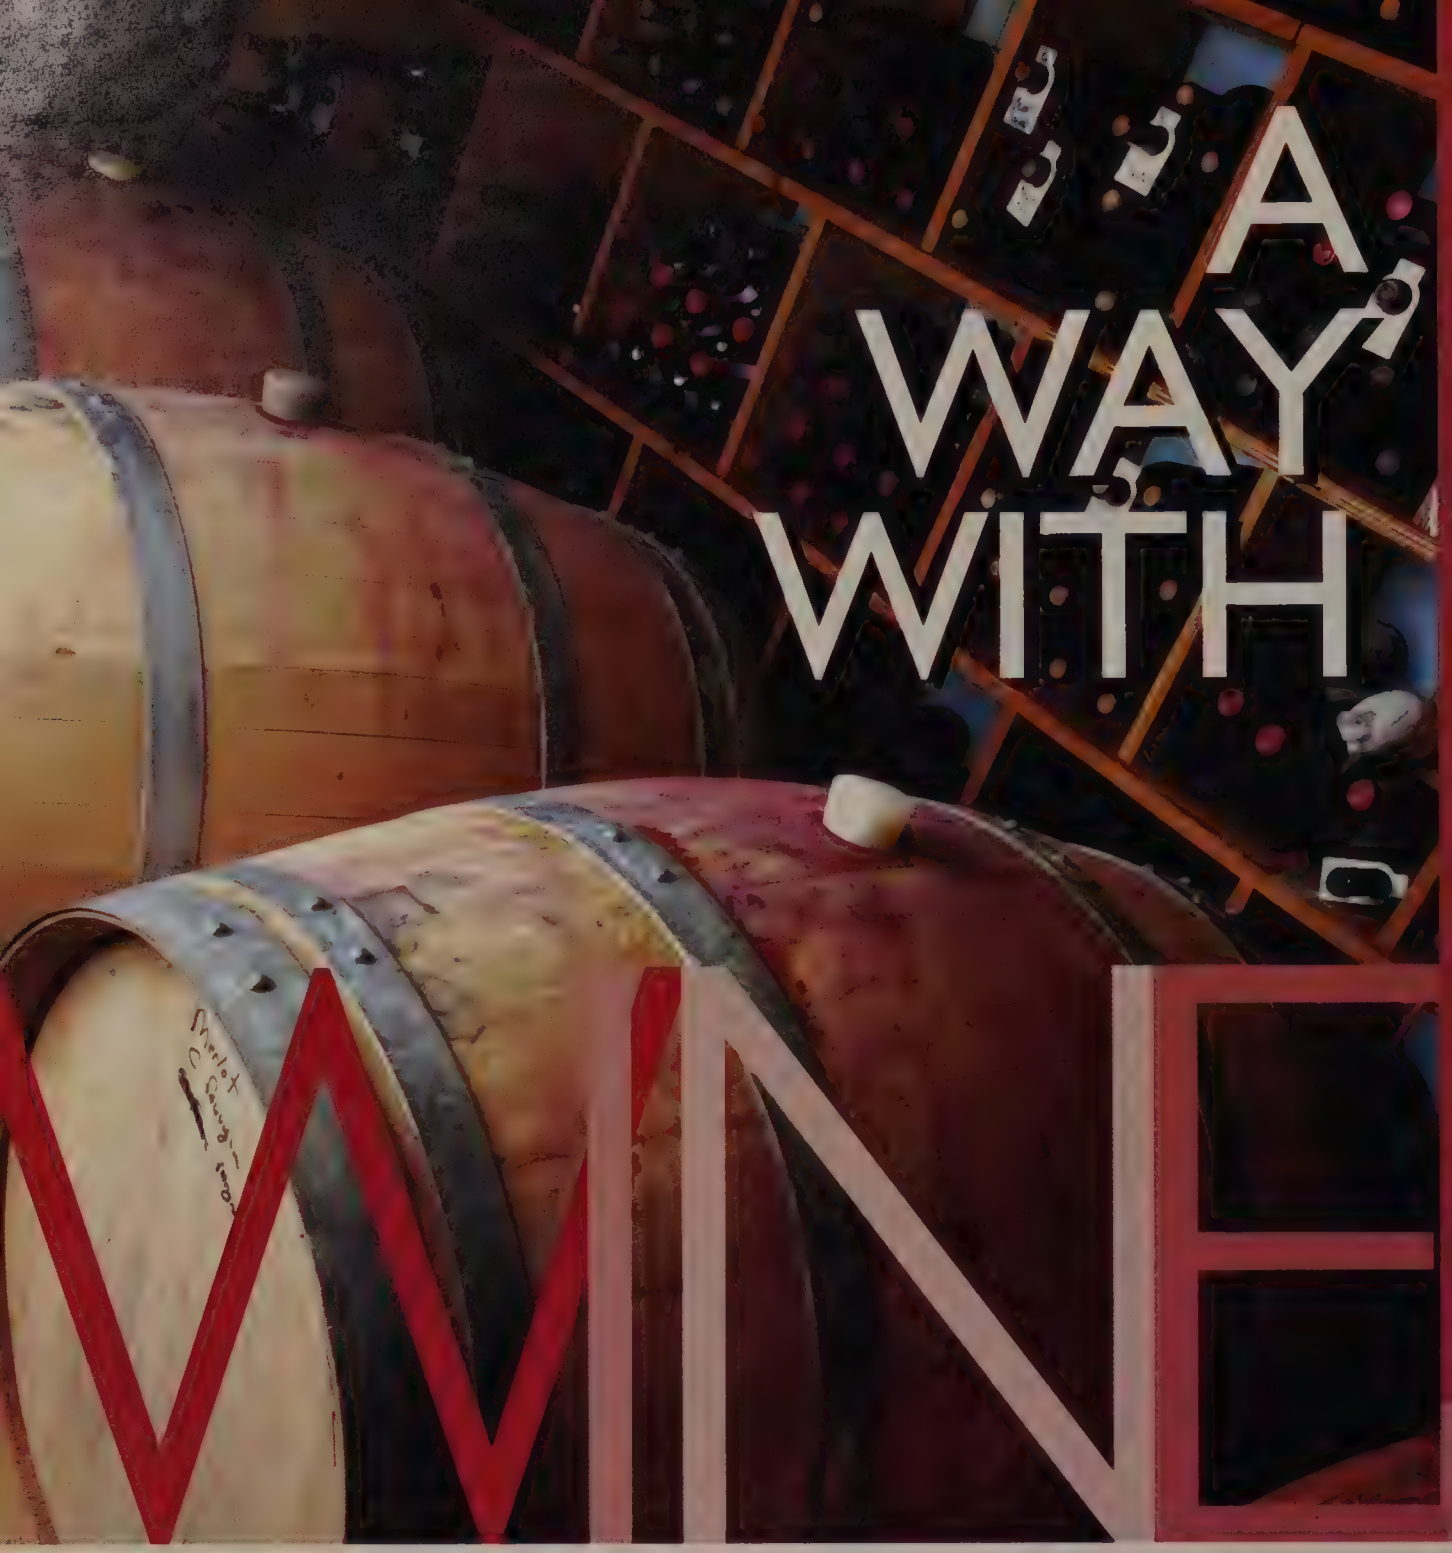
Harvard has reached an accord with the citizens of Harvston (formerly Allston). Residents were initially outraged by the name change, as well as a new zoning requirement that all buildings be covered with ivy. But protest has fizzled since the school has promised to build a really nice hockey rink.

Boston's project of converting all street signs to read in both English and Bawstlish is finally nearing completion. The city undertook the initiative to conform to the 2050 ruling of the Academie Anglais that Bawstlish had diverged enough from English to become its own language. MIT linguists have found that Bawstlish is most similar to a language spoken by a small sect of Druids in the 13th century who believed that pronouncing the r sound only on words that are supposed to end in a was an idear that would produce a wicked bountiful haaavist.

Global warming has melted the polar ice caps, but a shift in tectonic plates has raised Boston's elevation by 100 feet, sparing the city from the flooding that destroyed much of New Jersey. With the millions of cubic feet of beach sand the city dredged and imported from the Bahamas before those islands went under, Boston, with its balmy clime, is now the second most popular East Coast winter vacation spot. The most popular year-round destination in the country is still Dunkin-World, Dunkin' Donuts' man-made theme island off Randolph.

Newbury Street is even more popular, now that the Newbury Street League has installed turnstiles at each end and implemented a $500 admission fee to simply walk down the street. "This block is more exclusive than ever," says Sergio Fabiotini, owner of the Golden Sandal high-end flip-flop boutique. "I myself can hardly afford to come to work every day. The Sultan of Oman is my cashier. It is fabulous."

In an effort to relieve Boston's parking crunch, the city has passed an act giving meter maids almost unlimited authority. The Iron Maidens, as they are called, travel in packs and carry nunchucks. One motorist who brought a suit against the Maidens for slashing his tires disappeared before the case went to trial. Since then, no tickets have been appealed. Everyone still double-parks in Southie.



The institution of marriage is a hot topic in the state legislature, as the Heterosexual Polygamy Bill has been repeatedly blocked by a group of gay conservatives. The debate drew national attention when 96-year-old Madonna traveled to Boston and wed all her babies' daddies in a ceremony performed by a rogue minister.

The Public Garden is temporarily closed after an environmental accident involving the new robot-powered Swan Boats. The Swan Boat Pedalers' Union decried the installation of the nuclear humanoid tour guides when they were installed as "temporary" replacements during the Swan Strike of '45, and indeed the high-tech tours have run anything but smoothly. "I thought it was a little odd when our tour guide lifted the boat out of the water and carried it to Jiffy Lube in Brighton," said Matilda Poutine, a tourist from Quebec. However, between the Swan Boats, the Make Way for Ducklings statues and the Duck Tours (which now constitute 85 percent of traffic on city streets), Boston still leads the nation in the fowl-themed tourism industry.

Due to their popularity, the lights on the Comm. Ave. Mall remain up year-round. However, the policy of taking down the giant inflatable snowman on the roof of City Hall Plaza sometime around Easter has been less popular. "We've been really busy lately" said a city spokesperson. "Street cleaning just started again, and the school system needed help with its homework, and if it bothers you so much you can take it down yourself instead of sitting there on the couch like God's gift. You've got two hands, mister."

Starbucks is Boston's largest employer after diversifying its offerings beyond coffee, pastries and sandwiches. In fact, Starbucks Travel's Air Starbucks is the number-one carrier out of LoganBucks, according to a study by Bank of Starbucks' StarConsultingBucks division. And the Stanley Cup finals aren't looking good for the Bruins, who will have a tough time getting past the dominant Seattle BuckStars.

The elderly Farrelly brothers have finished shooting their latest film, set in Quincy, about a Tourette's-afflicted widow with her head on backwards who falls in love with an alcoholic garbageman who is actually a hologram. Early reviews are good, and there is already talk that Matt Damon's performance as the widow might have the Academy talking Oscar. iB

A WAY WITH WINE

SOME OF IT IS QUITE GOOD—AND SOME IS A BIT FUNKY—BUT FOR THESE LOCAL HOBBYISTS, HOME WINEMAKING IS A WAY TO CARRY ON OLD TRADITIONS AND CREATE NEW ONES.

BY JUDITH GAINES

PHOTOGRAPHS BY BRIAN SILVERS

Mario Rufo, a Boston-area wine merchant, stands amid an animated throng in Dorchester's Venezia restau rant, eyeing the cause of all the excitement: bottles of dark red zinfandels and ruby cabernets, pale pin rosés, a few white rieslings and fume blancs, and lots of young red blends. The occasion is the annu awards dinner of W.I.N.E.—Winemakers in New England—and the wines, bottles of which dot tables all over th restaurant's lobby, have been created by the people around him, who can barely contain their enthusiasm.

"You have to hand it to these folks," says Rufo, a wine judge for the competition, as he gags slightly on a white blend that reminds him of wet cardboard. "I mean, some of this wine just isn't that great. But they're so proud of what they've made. The other day, I was talking to one guy whose wine smelled like rotten eggs. I was trying not to hurt his feelings, but I felt I should tell him that the nose was pretty bad. 'Yes,' he said, not the least bit perturbed, 'but if you can just get past the nose.'"

Some of it could be called Chateau Moldy Leaf Litter—wine with the essence of the mildew that sometimes forms in the old wooden barrels in which it's stored. Some could be Blanc de Bleach—reeking of the chemicals used to clean the corks and bottles the homemade winemakers frequently recycle. Some is gaseous or bitter. Some is so strong it could be rocket fuel. Much of this wine, at least to my palate, is simply too young and immature to drink yet, since few of these enthusiasts can bear to wait even a year before consuming it. But there's no doubt that most of them are pleased with the results of what is often a time-consuming passion. Nor is there any doubt that amateur winemaking in Boston is on the rise.

No exact tallies are available for the number of home winemakers in the Greater Boston area. But Roger Savoy, former president of the International Home Wine and Beer Association and owner of the Modern Homebrew Emporium in Cambridge, estima that the total has reached the tens of thousands. Other aficionados say it's at least seve thousand—considerably more, in any case, than just a decade ago. A market once dor nated by older Italian, French and German men now includes more young people, m women and a wide range of ethnicities.

And for all the homemade wine that is corky or oxidized or smells like old pa bags, Savoy and others agree there is some that is very good indeed.

To many enthusiasts, Dr. Steve Ranere is the dean of home winemaking in the Bost area. During the day, Ranere is an internist at Mount Auburn Hospital in Cambridge. I he's a vintner by night, making seven different varieties, plus several blends, with h from a supporting crew of about 10 relatives and friends. The huge, climate-control basement of Ranere's Belmont home is chock-full of wine-producing equipment: crush presses, sinks, vats, barrels, bottles and dewdrop-shaped storage vessels called carboys. T basement walls are lined with bottles of Ranere's award-winning signature brew—a ble of cabernet sauvignon, cabernet franc, and merlot—plus a woodsy sangiovese, a clas French colombard, several earthy and full-bodied red zinfandels, a delicious pinot gri and more. Here and there, a slab of prosciutto hangs from the ceiling as well.

Ranere, a Brighton native, calls his wine "Ranucci," a combination of the names Ranere and Gentilucci (his mother's family name). The wine blends the efforts of both families, plus Ranere's longtime friends Peter Berlandi, a Boston management consultant; Joe Demella, a Cambridge plumber; and Ron Segalini, a Lexington attorney. Berlandi, Ranere and Segalini went to high school together, have traveled together, cook together, and for nearly 30 years have been making wine together too.

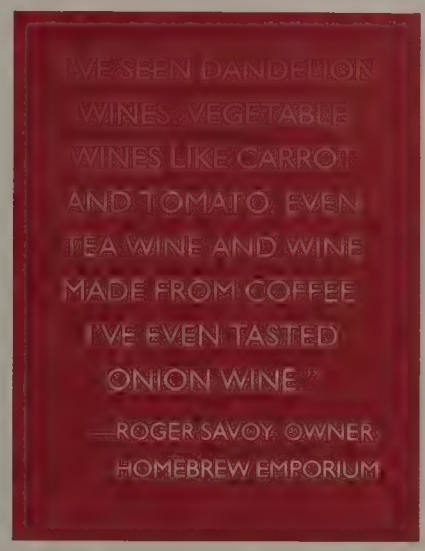
Kathy Ranere, Steve's wife, says that especially in the autumn, when they crush the newly harvested grapes, she feels as if she's living in a winery. "The whole house ferments in the fall," she says. And the sweet, rich smell of crushed grapes pervades not only the house but also the Raneres' yard and parts of the neighborhood. Even nieces and nephews and the Ranere kids' friends get involved, helping to haul the roughly 8,000 pounds of grapes that go into Ranucci wines each year. "If the girls want to date, we tell them it has to be someone who can lift the grapes," Kathy quips. "They're keepers if they're willing to schlep." In fact, daughter Katy's fiancé, Kit Hughes, now helps the Raneres with their winemaking.

Steve Ranere has been crushing grapes since he was 4 years old, when he would help his grandfather, who lived in central Italy. As Ranere grew up, he says, he often saw other relatives making wine as well. He started making his own in 1977, when a new priest at St. Columbkille's Church in Brighton, which had used a homemade wine for communion, decided God might be better served by a commercial vintage and gave the church's wine press to the Raneres.

At first, Steve recalls, the wine they made was "tart, strong, almost vinegary, with no subtle qualities," But he enlisted the advice of family and friends, took courses in wine appreciation at the Cambridge Center for Adult Education and read all the books he could find on the topic. Over the years, he has upgraded his equipment and made many refinements to the process. His wine has become more than just a hobby or a pleasant retreat from the stresses of the medical profession—it's something he's proud to share with the people he cares about most.

Winemaking, says Kathy Ranere, "is the strongest link between us, our children and our extended family. It isn't just the taste of the wine. It's what it means, the whole culture of wine. It's a way for us to come together around a table and enjoy life."

Asked if it seems odd that a doctor is so deeply involved in winemaking, Steve Ranere says, "Not at all. Studies show that wine, especially red wine, can reduce heart disease if drunk in moderation. In Italy, people live to be 100 years old or more drinking two glasses of wine a day. People have been doing it for centuries and living long, healthy lives."



Most home winemakers buy their grapes from a local produce dealer, such as American Vinegrape Distribution in Everett or Beer & Wine Hobby in Woburn. These distributors roll California grapes trucked to Boston in huge tractor-trailers at harvest time. Some hobbyists who lack the facilities to crush and press their grapes buy specially prepared juice concentrate, typically made by companies in Canada, where the homebrew contingent is much larger than in the U.S.

When asked what type of wine they like to produce, many Boston-area winemakers name red zinfandel. But syrah, sangiovese, cabernet and merlot are popular as well, as are white zinfandel, chablis and chardonnay. Some hobbyists use an inexpensive grape called vitis elegante, or even Thompson seedless, which are cheaper still.

Often, these vintners make their own idiosyncratic blends. In South Weymouth, Domenic Qualtieri, a windshield repair shop owner, mixes cabernet and chablis to make a dry rosé that is especially popular with the women in his family, as well as a heartier zin blend that the men prefer. "He's like a chemist, he's so careful making his blends," says Qualtieri's wife, Maria, his official taster.

Other winemakers take a less scientific approach. "I call my wines A, B, C and D," says Peter Neville of Weymouth, who raises funds for a group serving men and women with disabilities when he's not making wine. "I call my wines 'good,'" says Frank Russell, a mailman in South Boston.

Not every home winemaker uses grapes. "People make all sorts of fruit wines—apple, blueberry, cherry, blackberry, raspberry, apricot," says Savoy at his Cambridge shop. "I've also seen dandelion wines, vegetable wines like carrot and tomato, even tea wine and wine made from coffee. One of my customers brought me some lavender wine. You'd be surprised at all the varieties. I've even tasted onion wine."

The wines typically are made and stored in garages or basements or in some sort of garden or backyard shed—almost anywhere that's enclosed and dark and has a cool, stable temperature. Often, a few friends join forces to purchase equipment and share winemaking tasks. Teaming up allows economies of scale as well as merriment. Most of those interviewed estimated that their wines cost them about $2–$4 a bottle, not counting their labor.

Many wine hobbyists have been making their vino for several years, and over time have improved not only the taste of their product but also its appearance. "My father used to put his wine in old whiskey bottles and then stick it in a brown bag," Maria Qualtieri recalls. "Now I'm always looking for nice bottles for Domenic, and everybody has their own labels."

In honor of both his hobby and his profession, windshield repairman Qualtieri calls his wine "SuperGlass." Many other winemakers use playful or sentimental labels. Joe Polidoro, a retired Brookline pharmacist, calls his creations "Dolce Fa Niente," which means "Sweetness in doing nothing." His goal when his wine is ready, he explains, is to sit back and relax in the company of friends, just sipping.

Some amateur winemakers like to get creative with their labeling. Paul Barker, who owns the Scali Deli in downtown Boston, and his winemaking partners John Addonizio, a marketing director in Medford, and David Ventola, a chemical engineer who lives in Reading, have dubbed their wines "Bottle o Celli." The labels feature an image of Venus stomping grapes in a scallop shell. One especially charming label, for a vintage they named "Vino Delle Tre Mamme," prominently pictures the three men's mothers (Maria Barker, Antonietta Addonizio, and Anne Ventola), who, the label says, have lived their lives "in complete dedication to their families and children."

Winemaking is a complicated process that involves hauling the grapes, crushing and destemming them, pressing the juice, fermenting, filtering, and then bottling, corking and labeling the wines, not to mention cleaning all the equipment. But not one of these hobbyists describes it as work. They see winemaking as a social process, a fun way to get together with friends, an opportunity in many cases to continue a tradition that's been in their families for generations, as well as a chance to put their personal stamp on a beverage they enjoy.

Barker, Addonizio and Ventola have known each other since they were young boys, and although they have married and moved into different homes, their hobby gives them a way to hang out together in their old neighborhood, where they create their wine in Barker's mother's basement. "We sit on milk crates, tasting and bottling the wine, and my mother sends down some food. It's a happy time," Barker says.

"Even if sometimes the wine isn't that great, you're proud of it," he continues. "It's like having kids. You love them, regardless. They can do no wrong." iB

CULTURE SHOCK ABSORBER

Margalit Eren Rabinovich, licensed social worker, helps families with the issues of relocation from abroad. Phone consultation and coaching available. $125 per hour. Call 617-678-8815 or 617-332-6010.

An immigrant from Israel, therapist Margalit Eren Rabinovich is sympathetic to the cultural, practical, emotional and psychological jolts that face a family newly settled in the United States. Consulting and coaching, often on the phone, she helps overwhelmed new arrivals handle the stresses of their new culture. Landlocked in their own language and traditions, one or both spouses may become isolated and depressed, lacking the feedback and the stimulation that familiar people and customs provide. Divorce is not uncommon in these situations. Rabinovich, empathic and clear, puts a wider frame around immigrants' homesickness, negativity and loneliness, normalizing their distress as she walks them through the stages that such dislocations inevitably entail. She makes practical suggestions—especially urgent for families with children who are now expected to be American—on how to make those necessary adjustments to local norms without abandoning the values and customs of yesterland. Rabinovich encourages family togetherness and advises her clients to get support from fellow newcomers, while also inviting them to adapt and be curious about the different ways Americans go about things. In turn, they begin observing their own self and culture through new eyes.

THE MEN IN THE LITTLE WHITE THEORIES

Opening Skinner's Box*, by Lauren Slater, examines 10 psychological experiments of the 20th century.

Many of the innovative and daring psychological experiments of the 20th century seem positively dangerous in retrospect. B.F. Skinner famously put his daughter in a "baby box" and used depersonalized "positive reinforcement" to train her responses. Stanley Milgram, studying obedience, persuaded people in his experiment to give subjects on the other side of a partition increasingly dangerous shocks (the shockees were actually actors feigning pain, as the shock button was a fake). David Rosenhan sent people into a mental hospital to pose as patients while acting normal—and in that setting, the mental health professionals diagnosed the moles as mentally ill. All these stories paint fascinating pictures of the ways that psychology (is it philosophy, science or fiction?) explores sanity, volition and moral constraints. But Lauren Slater, a psychologist who has written about her own past experiences of seeping into mental illness, writes here about the long-term fallout from the work of these men. If psychology is sometimes dry, this book is liquid and luscious in the way it questions these experimenters' work. Slater talks to people who were involved in these bold adventures—some were duped, some were harmed and some were actually helped. And she muses broadly on how each trend brandishes its certitude, wondering whether Prozac and other drugs are really any better than lobotomy—and whether these psychological uplifts threaten what she calls "the dividends of darkness."

REVIEW

TERRAMIA IS A WORLD-BEATER

Christopher Bussell cooks up Italian classics in this longtime North End favorite

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

When people learn that I review restaurants, a common reaction is a mixture of wonder and envy. "You get to dine out regularly at someone else's expense?" is one reaction. "What a tremendous opportunity to retaliate against mediocre food, aggressive prices, overbearing headwaiters and shoddy service," is another. Both reactions are off the mark. I get a bill at the end of my meal like everyone else, and like every diner, I'm conscious of the value each meal delivers for its price. How else could one explain my penchant for sampling bargain-priced wines in lieu of Grand Cru Classé Bordeaux in my gastronomic adventures?

I choose every restaurant I review in the hope that it will provide a pleasant, memorable dining experience at a reasonable price, and I'm sorely disappointed when that does not occur. (Terramia, to my delight, met both criteria.) So far as retribution goes, I don't relish writing negative comments about a restaurant. Since my mother inculcated in me that old cliché that if you can't say something nice, say nothing at all, from time to time I simply discard my notes and abandon the idea of writing about a particular restaurant—unless, of course, its PR hype and "emperor's new clothes" qualities demand that readers be alerted.

This preamble is an attempt to explain that restaurant reviewing is not a steady parade of resplendent repasts in enchanting eateries, but rather entails a fair amount of muddling through modest but mandatory meals, pen in hand, week in and week out, with the inevitable highs and lows that accompany all human endeavors. That is what has made the last three weeks so enjoyable, since in that time I've had the good fortune to encounter two first-rate Italian restaurants, where the artistry of the chefs and the authenticity of their cuisine make dining an unalloyed pleasure, and where real value is delivered. That both restaurants are located in areas that have more than their fair share of run-of-the-mill eateries made my experience all the sweeter.

Terramia, on Salem Street, is somewhat more expensive than Brookline Village's La Morra (reviewed in the April 28 IMPROPER), but from a price-quality point of view, it is one of the more noteworthy venues in the North End. Originally Terramia showcased the highly regarded handiwork of talented chef Mario Nocera, with whom the present owner, Carla Agrippino-Gomes, opened the restaurant in the early '90s. Agrippino-Gomes bought out Nocera a couple of years ago when Nocera returned to Italy, and recently she brought Christopher Bussell on board as her executive chef. Bussell formerly owned and operated Butterfish, a tiny boîte in Cambridge's Craigie Circle that played to strong reviews until Bussell quit the business to go into education. Apparently the lure of the kitchen was too strong, and Bussell is back behind the stove at Terramia, putting out refined Italian classics.

This compact, 45-seat restaurant occupies a small storefront in which two tables for six fill the charming alcoves at the windows. Framed prints and unframed oil canvases hang on the room's soft yellow, stucco-textured walls, while Victorian sconces illuminate the exposed beam ceiling. Butcher paper covers white tablecloths to provide an informal ambience, but absorbent white cotton napkins portend that serious dining is in the offing.

Crusty Tuscan loaves from Brookline's Clearflour Bakery arrived at the table accompanied by a tasty cannelini bean puree flecked with diced red peppers and flavored with fruity extra-virgin olive oil. An appetizer of grilled sardines ($11 pristinely fresh in flavor and firm in tex ture, was complemented by a small cylin der of caponata composed of eggplant, re pepper and capers. Gamberi con finnoch ($13) brought a spectacular salad featu ing giant shrimp (larger than jumbo) of re markably vibrant flavor and impeccabl texture, tart-sweet blood orange segmen and a marvelous array of greens includin young, tender arugula, and a slaw of fres fennel. Another salad, pera con Gorgonzo ($9), consisted of grilled red pears wit arugula, walnuts and creamy Gorgonzo cheese with red and green lettuce toppe by a delightful thicket of crispy fried onio slivers, which added to the taste and tex ture contrasts of this toothsome treat.

Primi, all served in huge, oversized bow verging on the size of small basins, in cluded linguini con vongole ($19). Althoug the menu described this dish as made wi cherry tomatoes, I thought that the vibra red color, luscious, sweet-tangy flavor, ar marvelous texture came from plum tom toes. In any event, the result, enlivene with basil and moistened with white win created an al dente pasta so stunning as dislodge all but the most resolute of Atki followers from their no-carbohydra regime. A second pasta offering, raviolo aperto ($19), featured large, open-face ravioli with sea scallops, shrimp and fre zucchini in a lobster mascarpone sauc The three huge, satiny scallops and thr firm-textured jumbo shrimp were all t more remarkable since these shellfish a so easily made rubbery if overcooked to t slightest degree. The voluptuous lobst sauce and herbaceous essence of the zu chini complemented the superb shellfi and their tender pasta envelopes.

Terramia's secondi, or main courses, i cluded a double-thick Niman Ranch po chop ($25) garnished with peach radicchio and balsamic vinegar. A f inch thick, juicy, and rare as ordered, t pork's exquisite tenderness made it m in the mouth. The braised radicch which I first took for endive, provide pleasantly bitter counterpoint to t pork, while the peach added a mut sweetness to the ensemble. A garnish tender escarole delivered an unanti pated dividend. Moving to the roast rganic baby chicken ($24), I narveled at its succulent lesh and fresh, well-herbed, lavorful skin. The sauce, a eduction of the cooking uices studded with pancetta Italian bacon) and tomato livers, accompanied finger-ng potatoes roasted to the oint of perfect al dente tex-ure, and more braised greens. his small, whole bird, with s substantial garnishes, con-ituted a feast in itself.

Terramia's wine list has few hoices under $30, but for ightly more ($36), my com-anion and I enjoyed a bottle f Ludola Nuova Vino Nobile Montepulciano from the 1999 ntage. This classic red from he southern Tuscan town of Montepulciano consisted of 00 percent sangiovese, the ajor grape of Chianti. iven a little time to breathe, he wine's bold tannins and agrant bouquet came into eir own.

Service at Terramia was effi-ent, responsive and profes-nal despite the tight quar-rs, which the waitstaff avigates with grace and ility. Tableware was replaced tween every course in a anner befitting a more pricey d upscale eatery. The only rvice lapse I experienced was e waiter's failure to present d leave the cork after open-g the wine, a nicety that be-mes more than an empty sture when one seeks to cork and liberate the re-ainder of a good bottle of ne for later enjoyment. Just Beside Himself

Cooking up congrats…

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Location, location, location. Whether you're talking residential real estate or restaurant space, you know it can make or break your financial future. That's why Ian Just, chef/owner of Les Zygomates, is so thrilled about opening his second restaurant right next to his first, on South Street in the Leather District.

"I'm trying to invest in my future," says Just of his new venture, Sorriso. "It's gonna be fun. No investors, no banks, no nothin'. A lot of things fell into place for me."

After 10 years of success at Les Zyg, Just is confident he can succeed in a spot that was formerly home to Oskar's and, most recently, the short-lived Epiphany. "I watched that space struggle for years," says Just. Unlike its predecessors, Sorriso—the Italian word for smile—will not be a loungey type place. Instead, Just has hired Peter Niemitz to create a "classy" setting that befits a "real trattoria," where diners will enjoy a menu he describes as country Italian, with mid-teen prices.

Ian Just has big plans for the former Epiphany space.

When Sorriso opens in August, Just anticipates an "automatic synergy" between his two restaurants. Zybling revelry, perhaps.

SECOND COURSE:

Congratulations to two local winners of the International Association of Culinary Professionals 2004 Cookbook Award competition! Didi Emmons' Entertaining for a Veggie Planet won in the Health and Special Diet Category. Raise a glass of soymilk and toast the chef of Harvard Square's Veggie Planet! And Gordon Hamersley, chef/owner of Hamersley's Bistro, won in the Chefs and Restaurants category for his first cookbook, Bistro Cooking at Home, co-written with Joanne McAllister Smart. By the way, these are both excellent cookbooks that will get lots of use in your kitchen, whether you want to roast a chicken à la Hamersley or toast a chickpea à la Emmons.

Congratulations to Marc Orfaly, chef/owner of Pigalle, who's just been named by Food & Wine as one of the magazine's Top 10 Best New Chefs in America. Watch for his photo on the cover of the July issue.

Time to exfoliate those knees and heels—the seventh annual Chefs in Shorts event is just around the corner. This year's starting lineup behind the grills next to the Seaport Hotel features such chefs as Joanne Chang from Flour, John Merrill of Aura at the Seaport (of course) and Paul Delios of Charlestown's Meze Estiatorio. Delios is getting busier by the day; Meze is now open for lunch and brunch. Lunch items range from traditional Greek—say, spanakopita and lamb meatball sandwiches—to more updated dishes, such as Mediterranean black mussels steamed in lobster stock and ouzo with feta cheese, tiny tomatoes, garlic and fresh herbs. The prix-fixe brunch menu changes weekly, but expect to see the likes of crème brûlée French toast, Greek vegetarian dips (what does a Greek vegetarian taste like?) and frittata dishes. IB

CityScope: Music, Laughter and Hope

Most of the really glitzy, A-list charity events are held at a suitably swanky venue, like the Four Seasons, the Ritz or the World Trade Center. So when we saw that Comedy Central comedian Lewis Black, former poet laureate Robert Pinsky and Theo Epstein and his band Trauser were slated to appear at the Studio 25th Anniversary Gala, we thought for sure we'd be making our way to a five-star hotel ballroom—not the Brookline High School auditorium. Yup, twin sisters and owners of Brookline clothing store the Studio Ilene Epstein (Theo's mom) and Sandy Gradman are packing BHS with a who's who of Boston to celebrate 25 years of making Brookline women look and feel good. The benefit for Women's Cancers Programs at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, aptly titled Music, Laughter & Hope, is hosted by media maven Liz Walker, and cabaret artists the Follen Angels and swing-jazz-rock band Four Piece Suit also perform. That's reason enough for us to take it back to high school. Brookline High School, 115 Greenough St., Brookline (617-738-5091). www.jimmyfund.org/studio. 8 pm. $50-$200.

CityScope: SoWa Art Walk

If you live in the South End, you're aware that no legitimate South Ender has bought into the cutesy contractions SoWa and NoWa—terms coined by hyper-creative marketing types to refer to the areas south and north of Washington Street. If you're a non–South Ender (shall we call ourselves NoSos?), consider yourself warned—should you use these phrases in the company of a bona fide South Ender, you will stick out like Michael Jackson in the Sesame Street studio audience. Even if you don't like the abbreviation, you'll want to be in the South End on May 23 for the SoWa Art Walk. It's a day when South Enders and NoSos alike roam the streets of the South End exploring all kinds of art galleries, studios and loft spaces and getting a behind-the-scenes look at the artists' creations. You can also stop by the inaugural South End Open Market (with crafts, antiques and a farmer's market), which debuts outside 540 Harrison Ave., from 9 am to 5 pm. www.gatewaymainstreet.org. 11 am-6 pm.

CityScope: Turning Japanese

From John G. Avildsen (director of 1984's The Karate Kid) to Quentin Tarantino to Sofia Coppola, American filmmakers have been paying their celluloid respects to Japanese culture for years. But there's more to the Eastern isle's culture than martial arts, karaoke, or, in the case of Spike TV's Most Extreme Elimination Challenge, really weird game shows, and Boston-based Japanese artist Kaji Aso, owner of the Kaji Aso Studio, is prepared to introduce us to the more delicate Japanese traditions. On May 23, the studio holds its annual Japan Festival. We're pretty sure there won't be any crane kicks or Hattori Hanzo sword demos, but there will be haiku readings by the Boston Haiku Society, Tea House tours, Japanese food, ikebana and origami workshops and calligraphy and sumi paintings by the master Aso himself. Kaji Aso Studio, 40 Saint Stephen St., Boston (617-247-1719). www.kajiasostudio.com. 2-7 pm. $8.

Performing Arts: Dancing Days

The Dance Complex and the city of Cambridge present DanceMonth throughout May.

Dancing, like singing and creating an impressive stock portfolio, is one of those things that everyone wishes they did well. However, if you're like us, your dance moves are more Elaine than Beyoncé and should be reserved either for the privacy of your home or events heavily clouded by alcohol. The city of Cambridge and the Dance Complex have declared May DanceMonth, and just because we're better suited to spectating than taking center stage doesn't mean that we can't appreciate those blessed with rhythm. All month long the area's best choreographers host performances and events at the Dance Complex in Central Square. Highlights include Dancesongs of the Birdozoic, on May 15 and 16. Watch Dance Complex faculty, including Margot Parsons and Kieran Jordan, as well as Prometheus Dance co-directors Diane Arvanites-Noya and Tommy Neblett, perform choreographed works to live music by the hard-rockin' chamber quartet Birdsongs of the Mesozoic. Also, every Tuesday at noon, take in an hour-long performance, from salsa to tango, while savoring an organic lunch from Whole Foods Market. Those looking to rediscover their plié or Samba can brush up at a free 20-minute class at the Dance Complex Open House on May 23. The Dance Complex, 536 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-574-9363). www.dancemonth.com.

Music: Out of the Shadow

Setting a new standard for innovation in hip-hop, Ohio's Rjd2 and Chicago's Diverse represent an approach that's coming to seem more and more old-fashioned in the hip-hop world: innovation with roots in tradition. Today's mainstream hip-hop artists often seem content to rest on their piles of cash and ice, comfy in Escalades and tipsy on Cristal, their DJs miming the motions while a DAT plays the beats. Fortunately, Rjd2 and Diverse continue to push hip-hop forward by making music that's not just a carbon copy of yesterday's flavor of the month, and you can see them do it live at their May 15 show at the Paradise. DJ/producer Rjd2 has already released Deadringer, an album that expanded the definition of "instrumental hip-hop" while staying true to the form's origins and aesthetic essentials. Currently much in demand, he's also done a slew of remixes for notable artists in and out of the hip-hop genre, such as Massive Attack and Polyphonic Spree. He produced almost half of the tracks on Diverse's debut album, blending the rapper's emphatic flow with dusty funk samples and driving riffs lifted directly from the original vinyl. Diverse shares with Rjd2 the methodology of making new art with old tools; their collaborative tracks recall some of the rough-yet-bouncy pop rap of the early and mid 1990s, with modern lyrical twists and musical touches added to the mix. After the show, you can tell Rjd2 personally that you just read the first item about him that didn't mention DJ Shadow. (Whoops!) Paradise Rock Club, 967 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-423-NEXT). 8 pm. $15

Super Size Me and Power Trip fill you up

BY PAUL SHERMAN

There are journeys to be taken in the documentaries Super Size Me and Power Trip, but our vehicles have left the road and the wheels are wobbly. At times in these very different yet equally fascinating movies, it even seems as if civilization is teetering on the brink.

There's a fair amount of absurdity in both movies. While it's simply captured by director Paul Devlin in Power Trip, which chronicles the unusually melodramatic electrical problems in the former Soviet republic of Georgia, the absurdity is totally the handiwork of director Morgan Spurlock in Super Size Me. You've probably heard about Spurlock's movie: He's the guy who ate only at McDonald's for a month and made a movie about the effect it had on his body.

It's tempting to think of Spurlock as a lighter (and lighter-touch) Michael Moore. Like Moore, Spurlock is an instigator with a purpose. And though he's not as aggressive as Moore, it's surprising how overt Spurlock's cinematic and culinary experiment is in its attempt to demonstrate that the fast-food industry—and the food industry in general—is poisoning the American public. (It seems the experiment could've spoken for itself, without the blatant advocacy.)

Whether or not McDonald's or any other company is legally culpable for the effects of what they're peddling, the danger of it is all over Super Size Me. Spurlock gains 10 pounds before the first week is over, and after three weeks, the effect on his liver is, to quote one of his three doctors, "obscene." When he isn't showing the plain unpleasantness of his Mickey D's binges—like the time he vomits in the parking lot after downing a super-size Double Quarter-Pounder with Cheese Value Meal—Spurlock includes a number of tangents. He visits a lawyer who is spearheading lawsuits against the food industry (and who previously took on the tobacco industry) and goes to a school cafeteria where the food service has been outsourced to a company that does little more than pump junk food into the kids. At one point, he attempts to find nutritional information at any of McDonald's 83 Manhattan locations.

It's to Spurlock's enormous credit that he actually makes all of this amusing. He plays the role of guinea pig with such a commitment and sense of humor that the rather depressing message of Super Size Me goes down easier. Whether Spurlock intended it or not, the larger picture of this country that his movie paints is a frightening one of decadence, self-indulgence and slavishness to profit and instant gratification, at the expense of common sense and humanity. The obesity epidemic is really just the tangible symptom of deeper problems of companies behaving badly, Americans being mentally and physically lazy, and both parents and school systems not doing right by their children. (One of Spurlock's visits is to a Worcester elementary school where the kids have gym one hour a week.) The overall effect is like watching a society that's so self-destructive it's on the verge of collapse.

Collapse is a pretty good description of what happened in Georgia after the Soviet Union disbanded. One of the changes that citizens didn't cotton to was paying for electricity, which was provided free in the U.S.S.R. Georgians jerry-rigged all sorts of wiring setups to illegally tap into free power. If that failed, they simply didn't pay their bills. (This wasn't just out of custom; the average monthly power bill is about half the average monthly income.) That's the stranger-than-fiction setting Power Trip takes us to, when American power company AES takes over the newly privatized electricity distribution company in the sprawling Georgian capital of Tbilisi.

The common citizens are hardly the worst offenders in the story. The Georgian government is riddled with corruption (during power shortages, the energy minister sidetracks the little remaining juice to his friends and family) and the army won't even pay its bill. Pretty soon, AES (which inherits a 10 percent collection rate on bills) has no option but to start cutting off service to delinquent customers. Power Trip comes up with an appealing and intriguing guide to all this chaos in Piers Lewis, a well-traveled Brit who becomes AES's regional manager in Tbilisi. Considering that the movie has played in the Human Rights Watch Film Festival (and before that, last year's Independent Film Festival of Boston), it also throws us a pleasant curve by not being about corporate villains. iB

New Releases

Bobby Jones, Stroke of Genius ★★
Jim Caviezel putts for our sins in this glowing ography of legendary golfer Bobby Jones. I d know if it's a good thing or a disappointment director Rowdy Herrington doesn't make this as cheesy as his Patrick Swayze messterpiece, House. But this one—while mostly TV-m cliché—has a few interesting touches. Those clude the performances of the kids who play J as a boy (Devon Gearhart, Thomas Le Caviezel's portrayal of Jones' Sandleresque tem and a fun performance from Jeremy Northa Walter Hagen, Jones' hedonistic rival. All in it's competent and mostly dull, which I gue probably par for a golf movie. (At Boston C mon, Fenway and suburbs.)

Connie and Carla ★★★
Nia Vardalos returns to the big screen with a ri Billy Wilder's Some Like It Hot that you might My Big Fat Drag Queen Wig. Vardalos (who w the script) and Toni Collette play Chicago lou singers who witness a crime boss murdering an derling. The hunted women flee to West Ho wood, where they end up impersonating drag qu in order to find work in a cabaret. Vardalos and lette both have a sunny kookiness that gets the c edy over its dependence on stereotypes (there's variety among the overemotional gay men meet). And while it may be easy to dismiss the p "gays are people too" sentiment, following the bate over gay marriage the sentiment seems pr timely, after all. (At Boston Common, Fenway suburbs.)

Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind ★★
The latest mindbender written by Charlie K man (Being John Malkovich, Human Nature, Ada tion) is, as always, like an M.C. Escher drawi which you can't always tell which direction th are headed in, but you put your faith in the h that Kaufman will still get his characters to an teresting place. This time, the story about a co (Jim Carrey, Kate Winslet) who've had their m ories wiped of a fizzled relationship but try to re dle their romantic spark fails to reward that fa Kaufman bats around interesting ideas about struggle between science and human urges, but spite the appealing chemistry between the s the ride isn't nearly as involving, amusing, lay or cohesive as the metaphysical journeys Malkovich or Adaptation. (At Boston Comm Fenway and suburbs.)

The Girl Next Door ★★
Emile Hirsch plays the teen Everyboy well, El Cuthbert is whistle-worthy and Timothy Olyph shows more life than he ever has before. Still, th a merely decent (and flagrant) Risky Bus knockoff, with the aforementioned trio in th spective Tom Cruise, Rebecca DeMornay an Pantoliano roles. Hirsch plays a smart senio naughty babe he fancies (Cuthbert) is a porn trying to get out of the business and Olyphant her boss, who wants her horizontal on the set ag It's not too easy to connect the knockoff's dots to its credit, the film remains watchable. Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Good Bye Lenin! ★★½
An East German woman goes into a coma jus fore the Berlin Wall falls, and when she has to a stress-free life after she comes to, her son go great lengths to make sure she never learns tha Communist country doesn't exist anymore. great premise yields some amusing moments; also some disappointing ones. Unlike in Wilder's brilliant One, Two, Three (which co similar territory after the wall went up), the co here never quite hits high gear because the tempers the humor with shades of drama. Bu characters' family drama never becomes as m rable as the premise. (At Kendall Square.)

Hellboy ★★
Can't quite see what all the fuss is about ove comic book adaptation. The title character deed a boy from hell who was found when A forces thwarted a Nazi attempt to open the por the underworld and unleash demons. It has gre suals and a fun lead performance from Ron Per as the grown-up "H.B.," who now helps the government fight off the same sort of parano demons whenever they intrude on our world the film comprises a set of very familiar genre ments: a father-son relationship (with John H scientist as a surrogate dad), a lovelorn her pines for Selma Blair's firestarter, another de fighter for the government) and convenien not-too-interesting villains (this time, it's Rasputin and Nazis). And even in a fantasy context, the notion that the Nazis got power from the occult, and not from humans doing inhuman things, is borderline offensive. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Because every drop is precious.

Jersey Girl ★★

Ben Affleck turns in a strong performance as a Manhattan publicist whose wife dies in childbirth, and who soon thereafter loses his job for badmouthing a client and ends up back at his dad's home in New Jersey. Affleck and Raquel Castro, as his daughter, have a playful chemistry, and the performances make up for some of the weaknesses in writer-director Kevin Smith's script. But despite oddly appealing touches (like Affleck, Liv Tyler and Castro singing a song from Sweeney Todd at the girl's school variety show), the film often defaults to the most generic touches, like the inclusion of bland Fleetwood Mac or Springsteen songs at "emotional" moments. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Johnson Family Vacation ★★

More power to Cedric the Entertainer, who headlines his first comedy here. But this knockoff of National Lampoon's Vacation—this time about a black Los Angeles family struggling to make it to a Missouri family reunion—strains to generate laughs. The only sustained amusement comes in the two stretches when Cedric and his fellow Original Kings of Comedy vet Steve Harvey face off as two grown brothers who are still as competitive (and childish) as they were at age 10. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Kill Bill Vol. 2 ★★

It used to be fun when Quentin Tarantino put all of his pop-culture influences into a blender and spit them back out. What happened? Tarantino may have been one of the first American directors inspired by Hong Kong's 1980s action heyday, but since his Reservoir Dogs, a hundred other movies have mined the same sources. And Pulp Fiction was never as self-conscious as the second half of Kill Bill (or its predecessor, released last fall). Tarantino doesn't so much blend influences here as simply ape them one at a time: Sergio Leone close-ups and spaghetti western music in one of its chapters; grainy film, Chinese dialogue and a king fu homage in the other. At least Vol. 2 has Michael Madsen, the only star here who seems genuinely dangerous and doesn't come off like a mere actor playing bad-ass. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Mean Girls ★★

With a comic tone pitched somewhere between Heathers and Clueless, writer and co-star Tina (Saturday Night Live) Fey's comedy comes off like a watered-down version of both—not as savage as the former nor as stylized as the latter. Perhaps the problem was shoehorning the story to appeal to the preteen audience of star Lindsay Lohan. She plays a 16-year-old who's been living in Africa with her zoologist parents and is now entering a conventional high school for the first time. She gets taken under the wing of the school's popular girls and soon becomes consumed by the vain, territorial teen princesses' wicked ways. While respectable (and respectful of its audience), Fey's anti-gossip, pro-sisterhood tale is long-winded and not all that funny. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Passion of the Christ ★½

What's more creepy—to watch one man beaten to a literal pulp for half of Mel Gibson's Jesus movie or to realize that the movie is more about Christ's scars than his teachings? It's a toss-up, but they're the sort of things that keep the movie from being genuinely dramatic (the cheesy slo-mo moments don't help, either). You have to admire Gibson as a producer for doing it his way—on his own nickel, in subtitled Aramaic and Latin—but as a director he gets little across except violence, right up to the money shot of blood squirting from Jesus' hands as they're nailed to the cross. If you're just an average moviegoer who can't quote scripture, but is just looking for a good story, this plodding ode to martyrdom was not made for you and has little to offer you. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Still, We Believe: The Boston Red Sox Movie ★★★

It's good to see the Red Sox get some attention—you hardly hear anything about those guys these days. Surprisingly, this documentary about the Sox' 2003 season manages not to be redundant, because it focuses on eight different fans, most of whom are pretty colorful. My favorites are Brockton realist Jermaine, inseparable East Boston diehards Erin and Jessamy and, last but not least, Watertown pessimist "Angry Bill." His mood swings (over the course of a game, an inning or even an at-bat) are priceless and are something with which every Sox fan can commiserate. There's a lot of pain going on, especially come Game Seven against the Yankees, but this is a pleasure to watch. (At Boston Common and suburbs.)

Walking Tall ★★

The Rock convincingly stands up and fights, but it's not surprising to learn that this "whack first, ask questions later" action movie is totally generic. After all, it remakes the much-sequelized 1973 original, yet changes the hero from the real-life Buford Pusser to the fictional Chris Vaughn, a soldier who returns to his Pacific Northwest hometown to find it overrun with crime. The hero's vigilante streak doesn't make my fist pump in the air, and maybe if the bad guys and the fight scenes had less slickness and more realism, this might have come across better. The Rock may be smart and likable, but his latest movie isn't. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Young Adam ★★

Could someone please make an NC-17 movie that has something more remarkable about it than being NC-17? In this drama set in 1950s Glasgow, Ewan McGregor plays a failed writer who thinks with his tally-whacker, an opportunistic seducer whose wandering heart leaves a trail of hurt and even death. Despite a gritty tone, an effective nonlinear time structure, yet another strong McGregor performance and a fine cast (also including Tilda Swinton, Emily Mortimer and Peter Mullan), this would-be indictment of masculine sexuality gets unintentionally comical, after yet another husband decides to leave his wife alone with McGregor's character for long stretches of time. It dulls the drama when sex-starved women literally drop into his lap, and credibility steadily oozes out of this, like air from a split balloon. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

High Concept, Lower Case

The Magnetic Fields condense pop songs from many forms

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

When Stephin Merritt, a onetime Bostonian and the mastermind of the Magnetic Fields, says he grew up in "33 houses in 23 years," it sounds like a good concept for an album. But, he's quick to add, "It wasn't my idea."

Merritt has enough of his own ideas for concept albums. The key stroke was the Magnetic Fields' opus, 69 Love Songs, one of 1999's most critically acclaimed releases. That three-disc set surpassed 130,000 in sales (more than the band's five previous CDs combined) and cast the thirtysomething New York transplant as the Cole Porter of his generation.

"It was obvious from the moment that I thought of 69 Love Songs that it was going to be successful," he says of that witty, whimsical set of 69 songs that ranged from cabaret to country to synth-pop and most everything in between. "[Success] was the point, artistically and commercially.

"It took me a long time to figure out how to follow 69 Love Songs," Merritt admits. But five years later, there's i, a new Magnetic Fields CD whose song titles all begin with the ninth letter of the alphabet.

"For 69 Love Songs, I very much started out with a concept," Merritt says from his Manhattan apartment. "But for i, I was in the middle of making the album before the concept of the album actually occurred to me."

"More than half the songs began with the letter i, so I decided to make that an asset rather than a liability, and ran with it," he says. "The idea of i is more like a parody of the idea of 69 Love Songs, an even more arbitrary theme. Love songs are two-thirds of songs anyway, and probably a quarter of all songs in English begin with I."

The CD ranges from the opening minuet "I Die" to the Cure/Human League-like "I Thought You Were My Boyfriend," the sly "I Wish I Had an Evil Twin" (with the delicious couplet "My evil twin would lie and steal, and he would stink of sex appeal") and the harpsichord-laced "In an Operetta." And despite the disc's extensive use of first person (along with if, is, in and it's), the openly gay songwriter says, "It's not personal at all."

Overall, the new disc sounds more low-key and downbeat than 69 Love Songs, due in part to the focus on Merritt's deep, melancholy vocals. However, he adds, "I'm singing in a higher octave than ever before, so I'm trying for that commercial chihuahua voice"—a seeming reference to today's vapid pop competition as well as his pet dog Irving (named after Irving Berlin).

In contrast to 69 Love Songs, which featured additional singers and players, Merritt supports his voice on i with the core Magnetic Fields lineup of Claudia Gonson on piano and drums, Sam Davol on cello and John Woo on banjo and guitar, plus the singer's own quixotic instrumentation.

"I have a hundred some-odd instruments, but I ended up using a pretty limited palette," Merritt says. "I decided to only use instruments that I could play well. So in my case, that's pretty much ukelele, marimba and harmonium."

The quartet plans to keep things stripped down for a tour that hits Berklee Performance Center May 22 and 23, featuring about two-thirds of i, a fraction of 69 Love Songs and probably a song each from the band's other records. For one thing, there'll be no live drums. "I have hearing damage and can't actually stand around playing guitar in front of drum kits anymore," says Merritt, who isn't fond of playing concerts anyway.

He has plenty of other things to keep him busy, starting with three offshoot bands: the 6ths (which features guest vocalists), the bubbleglum Gothic Archies and Future Bible Heroes, an electro-pop outfit whose latest record influenced the acoustic direction of i. "[That] was entirely synthetic," he says, "and I wanted to swing the other way."

In the five years since 69 Love Songs, Merritt has also worked with theater director Shi-Zheng Chen on two Chinese operas ("I don't like Western opera," the singer says) and scored the soundtrack to the film Pieces of April.

As for the concept of "33 houses in 23 years," Merritt can thank his mother, with whom he lived throughout the Northeast. She played guitar and fueled her son's musical acumen, which paid off in 1989 when he cultivated the Magnetic Fields in Boston, before moving to New York in 1993.

"When I was 14," Merritt says, "she said, 'I don't care what you do with your life. I just want you to be happy, with the single exception that I want you to promise me that you're never going to try and be a professional musician.' I said, 'Sure, why would I want to be a professional musician?'"

And today? "Now she's very enthusiastic about it." iB

RECENT CORRESPONDENCE FOLLOWS.

Joe D.

We met on a Friday night at Sanctuary. I was in a fun-lovin' mood, vulgarly assaulting you behind your back on the very small dance floor downstairs. One of your friends caught me and we started laughing. You turned around (and I must say, what a face) and we introduced ourselves. You told me you're from Revere but have lived in the South End for six years because of your business, which I think is real estate. I told you I work in cosmetics, and told you the name of the upscale department store in the Prudential Center. "Hint, hint"—can't get any clearer than that. We then went our own ways with our friends. We saw each other later on in the night. I was looking for my Sex and the City drunk girls, found them, then went with you to find your lost friends. We found them, along with a small fan club of yours. I couldn't wait around any longer as you were doing your mingling, so I left and went back to my friends. And for some odd reason I can't get your handsome face outta my head. So, on that note, if you even remember who I am and would like to see me again, all I can say is take that "hint, hint" part to heart.

Disheveled

We've passed you day after day, season after season, and old and new mail service employees agree that you are the pinnacle of humankind. The black coat in winter, the black computer bag thrown over your shoulder, the perfectly disheveled hair…everything about you screams, "You cannot conquer time." You are manifest of our destiny. Time after time, time and again, our paths have crossed in the Yard, and it's time for us to pay homage to the joy you've brought into our lives. We love you, truly, madly, deeply.

My Dearest ML

I thought, hoped, that by helping you through your divorce and the loss of your parents that your thanks and gratitude for me would turn into love. I knew that I was the first man you had dated after a long, failed marriage, but thought I was more to you than just a transitional relationship. I still think about being with you, kissing you for 40 minutes; not the sex but the intimacy, the sense of being a part of you. I looked at your eyes and realized that no woman had ever looked at me like that before; it gave me a warmth throughout my entire being far more exciting then any orgasm ever was. When you told me that you believed your mother had sent me to you to show you how loving and caring a man can be, it touched my heart forever. It has been three months now since I realized that you would never love me. I think of you all the time, kissing in your car, your face on top of mine in the field as we hid from the children playing, and dancing with you, fast and slow, and that face, always that face with those eyes of warmth and happiness. I wish you well, and I wish I could stop thinking of you.

Dirty Doctor

How nice of you to litter at the Allston Car Wash! You obviously have no concern for the environment or for others. When it was brought it to your attention that the trash that you were removing from your trunk and depositing in the waste receptacle next to the gas pumps was flying everywhere, you showed nothing but a total lack of concern. You left:
-Old copies of the New York Times, the Journal of the American Medical Association and Annals of Internal Medicine
-Physician's notes (which should probably be shredded and not merely tossed away in a gas station only to be read by people like me who clean up after the likes of you)
-Other assorted detritus.
I heard someone say to you, "You know that your trash is flying around here." When you failed to show the slightest bit of interest, he said, "I guess you just don't care, do you?" You then just got into your car and drove off. I hope that your neighbors read this and see what kind of person you are. I also hope that your colleagues and patients read this. Know that you are not welcome at the Allston Car Wash.

Three Girls and a Guy

My friends and I sat at the table next to the four of you, up on the right-field roof at Fenway April 10. You guys are all originally from Chicago and we had a blast watching the game, drinking beers, celebrating Sox home runs and taking some fun, "creative" pictures. Your friend from Chicago with brown hair and glasses kept yelling "Nomah!" And your lone guy friend at the game refused to tell you how much he spent on those tickets. Anyway, we were supposed to meet up at Cornwall's after the game, but my friends had a change of plans to meet some other folks, so we didn't get a chance to keep the good times rolling. We did have a lot of fun hanging with you and the pictures came out great (they are hilarious!), so it seems a shame not to be able to share them with you. Hope you get in touch.

D-Train Reader

Absorbed. You were absorbed in a paperback the first time I noticed y on the Green Line. I tried to see wha book had captured your attention, I you were bent over, the cover lying in your lap. Then I noticed your red jacket and khaki pants. City Year? I wondered. I couldn't tell without seeing your face to guess your age. Next I noticed your softly curling brown hair. Another unusual characteristic. Before I could formulate a story that fit all the details, you hurried off the train at Boylston Street. We've seen one another, smiled at one another, and have even spoken since then. I've gathered a few more details—a PowerPoint presentation on hematology, a document from Tufts University in your bag—but rather than play hit or miss on the D Line, mail me at dtrainreader@yahoo.c We can talk over coffee or any other hot or cold beverage you prefer.

BFF?

To my Chandler-esque "Friend" fror college in the Watch City who share his middle name with Ross' first name, I know circumstances have tarnished our on-again/off-again (mostly off-again) friendship, but I wanted you to know that I will be thinking of you this week as our favorite TV show ends its run. It wo be impossible not to remember all t times we watched together and the many laughs we shared; and not jus on Thursdays at 8 pm. As I prepare say my own "I dos" this summer, I want you to know that there will always be a special place in my hea for you, my friend.

MAY 12 – 25, 2004

TAURUS APRIL 20–MAY 20

ngratulations to Bulls who already have a good fortune, along with the fortitude to tackle financial matter head on. Although a decision may already be in the works, be prepared to nsider other viable, profitable alternatives. That's because Venus, your ruling planet, is out to turn retrograde in your Gemini money house and won't return to its present sition until late July. Incidentally, Venus flips May 17th, the same day that artistic Neptune your career midheaven also shifts into reverse. Shall we review your recent output?

GEMINI

AY 21–JUNE 20

tience, please. It could take longer than usual for your ercury ruler to gain enough momentum to propel you into charted territory, beyond the same-old, same-old story you ard while it was retrograde. At the same time, Venus in ur sign is about to revisit the past, thereby justifying the eling that you're being sucked into a time warp. Rather an make a hasty and regrettable decision, wait to see what e goddess of love and nice stuff has to show you before ting one way or the other for one thing or the other.

CANCER

unexpected resource becomes available when ballsy ars—a recent addition to your sign—and independent anus align. Money can appear out of the proverbial blue; wever, understand that it is your self-confident attitude at'll attract it. This is also a good time for surgery (the ry planet rules the knife and chemical peel), but schedule either before or way after the 24th, which is when Mars ashes into Saturn and delays what you plan to accomplish. ld, brave Mars leaves Cancer on June 23 and won't return r another two years.

LEO

JLY 23–AUGUST 22

ances are you'll be drawn into a battle of wits between ends that may become more complicated than these mpetitions usually get. Decide up front just how involved u should be. And while you aren't in imminent danger of ing hurt, you'll soon tire of the endless exchange of gossip d vitriol. As for your own significant relationship—nbiguous Neptune in your house of partners turns trograde on the 17th—you may just as easily be sillusioned by a lack of progress.

VIRGO

UGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

y diplomacy instead of shrill demands. Next week, sweet d sociable Venus in your midheaven goes retrograde til the end of June. Because the goddess represents the men or artist types that can influence your career, those e the forces you'll have to contend with until early gust. Venus could also serve as a stand-in for a female the family capable of stirring up winds of discontent or inging up some past unpleasantness that you thought s dead and buried.

LIBRA

EPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

infusion of planetary activity in your career house uldn't hurt. Once Mars is embedded in Cancer, it'll add ergy to your job search. If you already have a job, it ight also make your boss more cantankerous. Aggressive ars visits your midheaven once every two years, so if you n remember what was going on in June 2002, expect mething similar either at work or at home. Since your nus ruler is retrograde in Gemini until the end of June, u may be taking care of old business—and old romantic rtners too—for most of the summer.

SCORPIO

CTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

til the sun enters adaptable Gemini on the 20th, it'll be fficult to alter the plans a headstrong partner has nceived for the two of you. However, you may want to ait a bit longer—until Mercury gets well past the point at which it turned retrograde—to ensure there'll be some progress before signing official papers. Your Mars co-ruler can change your come-on demeanor—from cool and cerebral to compassionate and nurturing—now that it's in cozy Cancer for a seven-week stay. You cook, you score.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Prepare to entertain the goddess of uncertainty for another three months. Up to now, you've managed to deal with vivacious Venus in your Gemini house of significant others, flitting here and there, landing nowhere for any length of time. As of the 17th, Venus turns retrograde, so your partner's vagaries, vanity and venality might not bother you as much. On the other hand, promises of as yet undelivered goodies may drive you to distraction. If you like playing games, you won't get too annoyed, but if not, there could be hell (Pluto in Sag) to pay.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Take a child under your wing. Right now, your creative and educational impulses are being emphasized, and it makes little difference whether you're sharing your wealth of knowledge or your material wealth and appreciation of the pleasures money can buy. This back-to-basics, down-to-earth atmosphere should last as long as wise and generous Jupiter continues to favor the Goat—until the fall semester starts. By taking advantage of cosmic timing, you can make a lasting impression on a young mind or a simpatico old soul.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Will the dreams become less vivid once Neptune in your sign turns retrograde? Will you decide to listen exclusively to oldies this summer? Will the fervor or fanaticism you exhibit seasonally die down, only to surge again for the World Series? Time will tell. However, what might be revealed sooner than that is how influential you can be while impulsive Mars and inventive Uranus support your idiosyncratic viewpoint. For the next few weeks, your mind's eye is focused on the future and what the buying public will need.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Read for Aquarius. Once again, you are on the same wavelength, sharing compatible visions. Independent Uranus in your sign receives a powerful infusion of energy from militant Mars on the 17th, just in time to compensate for your Neptune ruler's about-face. As this turning point draws near, you could become more confused than usual, eager to take a stand and make your point but doubtful of the outcome. Postpone, defer and procrastinate as long as you can; well past the next new moon, possibly until Memorial Day weekend.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Sensuous days filled with good and plenty are a typical Taurus treat, so while the sun illuminates your house of values, take time to enjoy the earthly pleasures Taurus offers. After your Mars ruler enters nurturing Cancer on the 7th for the next seven weeks, even comfort food may play a greater role in your life. And don't be surprised if a family matter that was relegated to the back burner two years ago starts to bother you again. Only this time, because responsible Saturn is also in Cancer, it has to be dealt with.

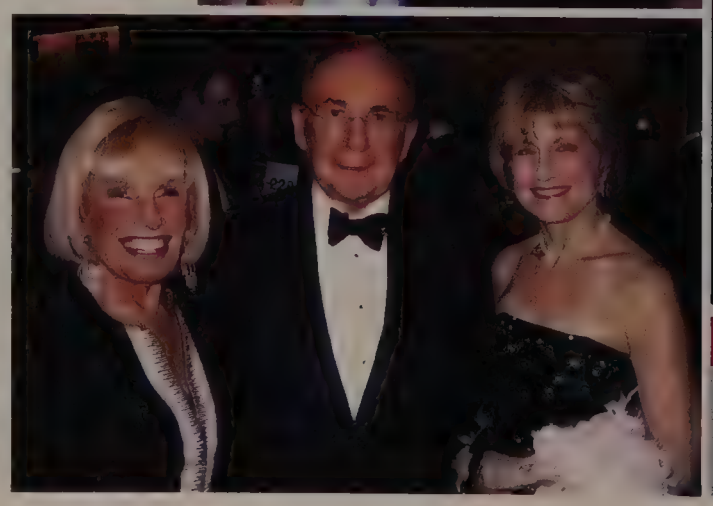
RECOMMENDED READING...

With apologies to Cole Porter, the only accurate way to describe Literary Lights, the Associates of the Boston Public Library's annual black-tie gala, is to say: It was delightful. It was delicious. It was deliterary.

Held in the grand ballroom of the Park Plaza, the evening began with cocktails and a chance to meet the writers who were either introducing the honorees or being honored. Among the former: people's historian Howard Zinn; the dashingly handsome Andre Dubus III (squiring his stunning wife, Fonteyn); cerebral talk radio personality Christopher Lydon; and best-selling novelist Anita Diamant. Among the latter: former poet laureate Robert Pinsky; latter-day Dr. Spock (as in the pediatrician, not the pointy-eared Vulcan) T. Berry Brazelton; The Orchid Thief author Susan Orlean (who has at least one thing in common with fellow writers Isak Dinesen and Nora Ephron: Meryl Streep played her in a movie); and absurdly handsome author of The Hours Michael Cunningham (who also had Meryl Streep star in the movie version of his book, not to mention Nicole Kidman wearing a prosthetic nose).

Then there were the guests, an equally dazzling collection that included library honcha Vivian Spiro and her husband, Charrette founder Lionel; his gorgeous daughter, Laura; philanthropic duo Bill and Marjie Kargman (whose daughter-in-law, Jill, co-wrote what promises to be this summer's hottest beach read, The Right Address); past honoree and financial adviser to the rich and famous John Spooner with the delectable Susan; and bright young Beacon Hillions Sam and Tess Atkinson.

This being Boston, there were some snooty comments, like the observation about T. Berry Brazelton: "not only that, but his wife is a Lowell," and some amusing comments, like the guest who said, "I just met my Pulitzer Prize–winning future ex-husband."



Cocktails were followed by a candlelit dinner in the ballroom, at tables decorated with ivy and books by the authors, after which came an edifying speech by Robert Pinsky, followed by the Yankee grab for the best books on each table. By the time everyone said goodnight, all that was left was some ivy and a few of what one guest described as "the sort of things you're supposed to read but no one ever does."

SOME ENCHANTED EVENING...

The Boston Ballet must have a fairy godmother. How else to explain the Westin Hotel ballroom—which normally looks like it should be filled with corporate drones snoozing through a PowerPoint presentation—being transformed into a setting fit for a fairy tale?

The event was the Swan Lake Ball, and the likeliest suspect for guardian-with-supernatural-powers was the evening's honorary chair, Cathryn Keith. A tireless volunteer for the ballet, she wears her hair in a trademark style that resembles some sort of delicious French pastry, and there's a twinkle in her eye that makes one suspect she has a magic wand tucked up her sleeve.

Be that as it may, the room was done up to resemble the night sky, with blue-black curtains studded with twinkling lights covering the walls, and the decor was only one of the evening's many delights.

Others included performances by members of the company, and the opportunity to schmooze with the likes of Tennessee belle Trevania Dudley Henderson and her affable other half, John Henderson; the highly amusing Caleb Clapp and his stunning blonde spouse, Elizabeth; fashion plate Anna Cheshire Levitan; the radiant (and it's not just the diamonds) Susan Poduska with her adoring husband, Bill; tall drink of water John Osbon and his gorgeous wife, Andrea; brunette bombshell Jeryl Oristaglia; philanthropic fun couple David and Nina Fialkow; peripatetic attorney John Weltman; and one guest whose first words upon arriving were, "Oh, God! Another charity auction! Don't let me bid on anything."

Adding to the visuals were the black-and-white feather boas that guests received for a donation of $100, which were worn by most of the women and several of the men and prompted one guest to say, "It's a great look—kind of like Big Bird meets Liberace." IB

At the Swan Lake Ball, clockwise from top right: David and Nina Fialkow; Ron and Ronni Casty; Joan and Ted Cutler and Valerie Wilder; Anna Cheshire Levitan and Elizabeth Clapp.

SAVORING SUMMER

Carpe diem. You hear the phrase a lot, but it's an important sentiment for Bostonians on the brink of summer, and it's the message behind our lead feature story—a list of 30 things to do during the city's all-too-brief warm season. From hitting the Mr. Frosty truck for a vanilla-chocolate swirl to exploring the Harbor Islands or catching some Shakespeare from a picnic blanket, these are activities best or only enjoyed when the weather's nice.

Also in this issue, we've got details on what to do in Provincetown—easily reachable by high-speed ferry and launching a new theater this summer—and an inside look at Faneuil Hall's American Idol–style street performer tryouts. Finally, Ezra Dyer gets the scoop on nearby minor league teams, whose promotional antics and brand-new facilities offer a fun alternative to Fenway—for under $10.

After such a harsh winter, why not really live every minute of this summer?

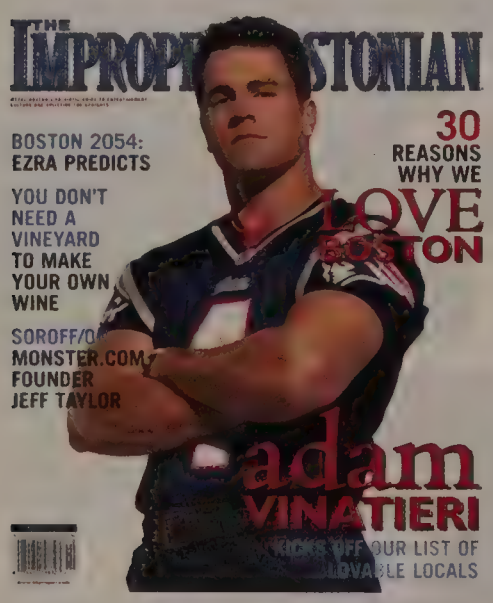
NORM!



Hey IMPROPER, how come you didn't mention Cheers in the "Places We Love" section (May 12)? Sure, it might be "touristy," but then, half of your list is anyway. Don't we feel pride when we stroll by Beacon Hill's most famous watering hole, knowing that more than 11 years later, people are still flocking there to see where Sam and the gang hung out? Wasn't Cheers one of the best sitcoms ever?

GETTIN' PAID

In response to Chris Collins' column in the May 12 issue ("Don't Knock Athletes for Wanting to Get Paid"): Collins is right. Pro sports is a business, and the movement of players is dictated by money. We all know it, so why do we complain when we see it happening? Maybe it's because we feel a sneaking suspicion, any time we buy a $4 Cracker Jack at Fenway to help pay the impossibly inflated salaries of the Pedros and Mannys of the world, that we're complicit in an outrageous injustice. We know that these guys aren't really worth 1,000 times more than a social worker or a schoolteacher—and we expect them to know it too. The fact that Pedro can say with a straight face that $15 million might not be enough to support him suggests that he's confusing what the market will bear with what he really deserves. My advice to these athletes: tell it like it is. Don't pretend you need the money, and don't pretend you deserve it. We all know better. It's a market, plain and simple, and you've got something to sell to the highest bidder. We're adults; we can take it. After all, as Mr. Collins point out, who among us wouldn't do the same thing? But if you're going to continue to treat receiving a multimillion dollar paycheck like "making ends meet," I think we all have good reason to keep complaining.

TOUGH BREAKS

Quality articles on surviving the breakup of romantic relationships are few and far between. So congratulations to Susan Abbattista and THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN for printing "Loves Me...Loves Me Not" (April 28). Survivors of break-ups will find Ms. Abbattista's well-written personal account thoughtful, instructive and helpful. And the comments by the psychotherapist flavor the article even more for readers.

As a psychotherapist myself, I would like to offer another idea that readers might find useful in speeding up the recovery process: Survivors benefit from actively spending time remembering negatives about the other person. This helps them get their lost love "off the pedestal" and roots the missed partner more firmly on realistic ground—i.e., the partner was not "wonderful," only human.

—CARL SCHNEIDER
Cambridge

FLIRT IT UP, GUYS

I read "Flirting with Disaster" (April 28), and the first thought that came to mind was, "Give a girl or guy the chance first!" I've lived in a lot of different cities of the world, but none where it was so hard to enter a bar as a young, single, attractive woman and leave having at least said hi to or flirted with one single guy. Guys give you the side-glance, but when you boldly step up to the plate with a flirty or friendly remark, there's no response. Are they intimidated by a woman who comes alone? Or does this merely highlight the strange fact that most people come to Beantown bars with dates or friends and have everything on their mind but looking to flirt or meet somebody? Either way, it feels like a steady massacre of us "single singles" (whose friends are all coupled up, and so have to go to bars alone some nights). What gives?

—KATHLEEN HALEY
Cambridge

BUT NOW HIS EGO IS HUGE

I enjoyed Ezra's "Babe Magnets" piece (April 28). After reading the article and seeing what he looks like, I think there is something seriously wrong with this town when someone as hot as Ezra is still single!

LITTLE ITALY

Several years back, Andrew Bullock, founder of Manchester, England's popular Croma pizza, was playing a round of golf while on vacation in Spain when he was clocked by an errant ball. The offending ball belonged to Boston husband and wife Biff Shea and Wendy Spivak. Fortunately, Bullock wasn't gravely wounded, and the three became friends. On a later visit to Bullock's UK home, Shea and Spivak went to Croma. Long story short, they loved it, and the couple opens the first U.S. Croma, on Newbury Street, Memorial Day weekend.

Designed along the lines of the casual but elegant Manchester restaurant, the former Davio's storefront has been transformed into an open, airy space with bars on both floors. Thin-crust gourmet pizzas are the specialty, and they range from the more traditional types like pepperoni, and margherita pizza (with mozzarella, tomato sauce and fresh basil) to more adventurous offerings like Cajun pizza or tandoori-marinated chicken pizza—all between $8 and $13. Oven-baked pasta dishes like grilled chicken and spinach cannelloni, mushroom lasagna and eggplant Parmesan are in the $10 range. Croma also has an extensive list of wines by the glass (they've selected 30 so far), with many options for as little as $6.

Croma's signature dessert, the delectable English sticky toffee pudding—a gooey cake served warm, topped with a toffee sauce—is one of the best things we've ever tasted. Word has it that even Johnny Depp is a toffee pudding addict, so you shouldn't feel bad about ordering an extra one to take home. 269 Newbury St., Boston (617-247-3200). —E.H.

ROMANCING THE STONE

Those looking to meet a mysterious stranger in a hotel bar, or sip a pricey martini, should check out the Ruby Room, in the spankin' new Onyx Hotel. Not to be confused with Britney Spears' world tour (sponsored by the hotel chain), the newest venture by Kimpton Hotels (Hotel Marlowe, Bambara) opened May 18 near the FleetCenter. And what's a boutique hotel without a swanky bar/lounge? The dimly lit, black-and-crimson-hued Ruby Room features sexy swirled carpeting, red leather couches and candlelit tables. The signature Crimson cocktail—a high-octane combo of Bombay Sapphire, ruby port, grenadine, and fresh lemon—tops off the ruby red theme and goes for $11. 155 Portland St., Boston (617-557-9950). www.rubyroomboston.com.

BARBARA WASHBURN

Though their presentation couldn't be more different, the IMAX film Everest and its cheesy Hollywood studio counterpart, Vertical Limit, succeed in making the same point: It takes brass balls to climb mountains. In 1947 Barbara Washburn of Lexington joined her husband—Museum of Science founding director and famed photographer Bradford—on an expedition to the top of Alaska's Mount McKinley, becoming the first woman to scale the highest peak in North America. Washburn's climbs (almost all made with her husband) pioneered the way for women mountaineers, and on June 8, the Museum of Science dedicates a screening of the new film, The Women of K2, to her. The documentary tells the stories of five female climbers—all of whom died in climbing-related incidents—and their treks to the top of K2. Washburn took a moment to chat with us about her history as a mountaineer.

IB: You were the first woman to climb Mount McKinley and in essence, inspired the film The Women of K2. Were you aware you were being a trailblazer for women when you made your first trip up the mountain?

Barbara and Bradford Washburn

BW: I had no idea. And it was not my idea to climb Mount McKinley at all. This was a movie company that came to my husband to climb Mount Everest (they didn't know Nepal wasn't open to the public at that time). They didn't think the American public was interested in climbing, and it wasn't in that day. They wanted Brad to make a movie to interest the people, and Brad said he couldn't do Mount Everest, but he could do the same thing on Mount McKinley. So I went with him.

IB: So it was an accident?

BW: Good heavens, yes. I didn't want to go, I had three little kids. They knew it was cold and high, and [Brad] said, "I know you can do it," and the movie company really wanted me to go. They said it would make a great movie if a girl was in it. They really put a lot of pressure on me. I finally gave in, and I'm glad I did.

IB: Have any of your children followed in your footsteps as a climber?

BW: I have a grandson who's a climber, and he'll probably do it one day just for the sake of family reputation, but there's really no reason to climb Mount McKinley.

IB: Do you have a favorite climb or trail in the world?

BW: I don't think so. We don't do it anymore—I'm 90 years old—but I think going up on the trails in the White Mountains was fun. It was nearby and a nice way to spend a weekend.

IB: What was the biggest challenge in making all these climbs?

BW: Leaving my three children. The rest of it was plain hard work. Climbing Mount McKinley is not technically that difficult. I knew how to use an ice ax and walk on ropes with people. You just had to plug along and use a lot of willpower.

IB: Did you and your husband ever consider climbing Mount Everest?

BW: I think maybe in the old days if Brad had been the right age when Everest opened up, but when he was the right age you couldn't get to Nepal. But he's not sorry he never had to climb it. It's a long trudge.

IB: What's your advice for women in general?

BW: We're all for women doing everything, but I think the women on K2 were way beyond what they should've been doing. A lot of people who have been on it were climbing beyond their ability.

PIZZA AFTER DARK

Late-Night Treat... The palate isn't always at its most discerning late at night. But when you're sober enough to seek an alternative to the greasy, gut-wrenching pizza and sausages often devoured due to hazy judgment or a lack of better options, check out Bricco. The fancy North End eatery is now serving up gourmet pizzas in its lounge from 11 pm to 2 am (and maybe even a little later), the only time you can order such pedestrian fare at this high-end Italian hotspot. Selections include traditional fare like Pizza Bricco, with fresh bufala ricotta, shaved mortadella di Bologna and parmigiano ($14), as well as more unusual offerings like Pizza Dolce di Mezzanotte, with Nutella spread, mascarpone, shaved white chocolate and mint leaves, for $12. The menu changes weekly. 241 Hanover St., Boston (617-248-6800).

In the News... When Leather District restaurant News announced the launch of its Ladies Night menu, we read between the lines: lots of men and very few women, or, to put it bluntly, ideal man-hunting grounds. Ladies who are more in the mood to feast on food rather than men can choose from an array of free apps, salads, entrées and desserts from 5-11 pm on Wednesday nights. If you're still in the mood for a deal on Thursday, News' Timeless Thursdays promotion offers (to both sexes) a buy-one-get-one deal on martinis from 5-6 pm. 150 Kneeland St., Boston (617-426-6397). www.newsboston.com.

Acting Bratty... And you thought brats were strictly for Midwesterners. Chelsea-based deli company Kayem recently cooked up a new line of grillin' treats just in time for summer: the Original Boston Brat, Cheddar Brat and Pale Ale Brat, the last made with Harpoon IPA. The sausage-slingers also created a cheerfully bizarre marketing program for the new meats, dubbed "Bratwürship." Or maybe you don't think a bratwurst dressed as a pimp is a little bit odd.

Spicing It Up... There's suddenly a long list of reasons to head to the Inman Square jazz club Ryles. Starting this summer, Ryles is spicing up its repertoire with live rock and folk music on Wednesday nights, and funk and soul on Friday nights. The club is overhauling its menu as well, with the introduction of Mitch's Authentic BBQ. The southern BBQ replaces the pub grub offerings, and dishes include pulled pork, ribs, biscuits and collard greens. Jazz bands will continue to grace the stage, so when the waiter asks you what kind of barbeque sauce you want, try this one out: "Smooth and spicy, just like my jazz." 212 Hampshire St., Cambridge (617-876-9330). www.rylesjazz.com. —E.H., J.I., Abby Bielagus and Megan Grant

EXPANDED HORIZONS

New and improved versions of some of our longtime favorite stores are popping up in Beantown to help you part with your money even faster. Adidas "Originals" store recently opened its doors in Cambridge to reveal a stylish retro boutique featuring old-school products — vintage favorites reintroduced in limited numbers, as well as contemporary interpretations of classic styles. Coolest of all is the vintage trefoil logo, introduced in 1972, that appears on all Originals gear. If that's not enough to incite a spending spree, Diesel recently reincarnated into Diesel Planet. The new 3,800-square foot, bi-level store, a few blocks down from its former Newbury Street location, carries vintage and modern Diesel wear. Look for denim galore and my favorite — mesh shirts in sorbet colors — to get you inspired for spring. —Samantha House

Downward Dog... There are dog people and then there's everyone else. If you fall into the "everyone else" category, doggie yoga and doggie acupuncture classes may seem, well, dumb. But if you own a dog, used to own a dog or hope to own a dog someday, you know how absolutely essential it is to maintain a healthy and meaningful relationship with your pooch. Jennifer Vickery of the Pawsitive Dog has teamed up with yoga instructor Kerry Jordan and acupuncturist Claire McManus for a series called Holistic Hounds. Dog owners bring their dogs to class and learn to administer acupuncture for canine relaxation and to aid in digestion. In Doggie Yoga, owners and dogs stretch together. If only there were classes for dogs to learn how to brush their teeth and maybe do a load of laundry or two. www.thepawsitivedog.com

Dog yoga is part of the Holistic Hounds series.

Somerville's Armory Building

Castle Rock... Somerville's Old Armory Building (commonly referred to as "That place that looks like a castle") has proud new papas, and the price tag was nothing to scoff at. Brothers Joseph and Nabil Sater, well known for the ingenious investment they made more than 30 years ago in the raw-talent hot spot the Middle East, purchased this mother of all fixer-uppers at auction for no less than $2.375 million. The 32,200-square-foot parcel is situated in the heart of Somerville, and the word on the street is the Saters are interested in using the space to encourage the growth of Somerville's artistic community. Will it be the next It rock club? The Saters are feeding the mystery when it comes to exactly what the space will be used for, and Joseph says the building needs quite a bit of love and tender care. Still, artistic ammunition from local talent is bound to deck the halls someday soon.

Prime Time... Local fans of The Sopranos who've managed to keep watching through this season's mediocre plotlines might have recognized a voice on the show's May 16 episode. Cantab Lounge crooner Little Joe Cook's 1957 hit, "Peanuts," set up Tony's freaky dream sequence episode. The bluesman and recent birthday boy (his 80th) and his band the Thrillers shared the stage with the likes of the Shirelles, Louis Armstrong, and B.B. King before they began a 25-plus-year gig at the Cantab that's still going strong. So how does Cook feel about more recent prime-time exposure? Cantab owner Richard Fitzgerald says Little Joe isn't fazed—he hadn't seen the show until his song made a guest appearance.

This Little Piggy Got Smashed... Lynn-based entrepreneurs Joy Bruno and Peggy and Jodi Zeramby are behind a new company called Pig Tales that seeks to help customers vent frustration the old-fashioned way: by smashing something. The ladies' marquee items are custom piggy banks that can be emblazoned with motivational ditties such as "You are my boss, I make you look good. You live in a palace, I live in da hood." Other pig–themed merchandise includes key chains, mouse pads and fridge magnets, but you probably won't feel as satisfied taking a mallet to those at the end of a stressful day. The swine are available at www.pgtales.com.—E.H., J.I., Abby Bielagus, Ezra Dyer and Megan Grant

CIAO, BABY

I could be a European playboy if someone would just give me a chance

Whatever you've heard about South Beach is probably true: Yes Virginia, there are Ferraris and topless beaches everywhere. After spending a recent weekend in South Beach, I now want to live there, but I don't think I have the means. I spent $500 on food and drinks in a period of 24 hours, and dropping $182,500 per year on sustenance is probably outside my budget. But you see, I was hanging with Laio and I didn't want to let him down.

Laio is an Italian who used to own a restaurant but sold it for an apparently extravagant sum. Now he spends his days enjoying the Miami good life with his hot girlfriend, Suzie. Normally I'm contemptuous of profligate Euros, but after spending the better part of a weekend hanging with Laio, I became accustomed to the ways of the playboy. I could probably get used to going to only the best clubs and bribing bouncers and lounging by pools all day and never drinking tap water. Someday I might even tip the guy in the restroom who hands you a paper towel. OK, I won't—I'll always resent that. Although I might be inclined to pay for hand-drying if the guy would let me push his forehead like a button and then make a "whooooooooshhhh" sound as he blows on my hands. That would be fun. What was I talking about?

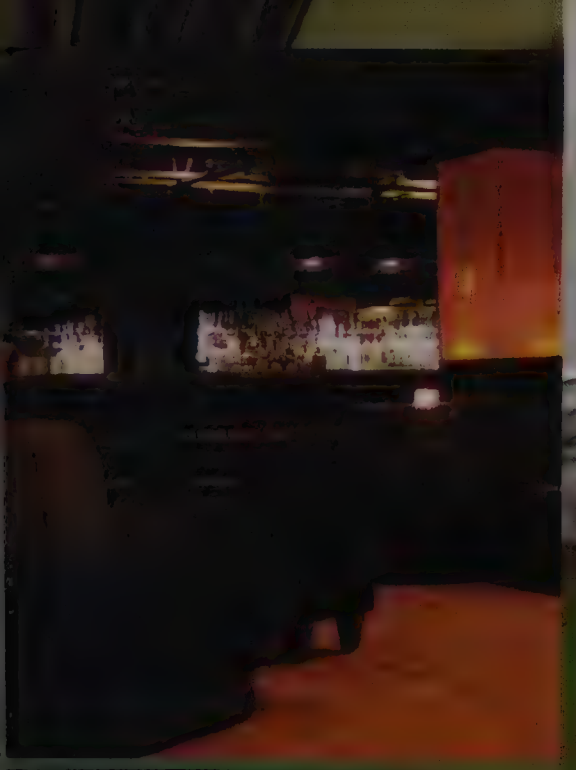
Laio sets a high standard for leisure. I discovered this right away, when I suggested that our party stop at the Clevelander Hotel, which is on Ocean Drive and features a pool surrounded by multiple outdoor bars and a dance floor. Sounds like a good time, right? Wrong. "The Clevelander is filled with tourists," Laio said, as if I'd suggested that we go Dumpster-diving for new underwear. "We'll show you some good places that the tourists don't know about." Laio's right, tourists are so pathetic, I thought as I pulled my "Party in the City Where the Heat Is On" T-shirt down over my fanny pack.

One of Laio's favorite places is a club called Privé, which, fortunately, is open to the publique. "You can't even get in here unless you know the bouncer," Laio told us. Knowing bouncers is important in South Beach. I suspect that if Laio had enough disposable income, he'd hire a bouncer to stand in front of his apartment and give him a hard time when he comes home at night.

Once we got into Privé, I was expecting a scene reminiscent of a particular Master P video, which Mr. P described thusly in an MTV interview: "We wilding out. That video, I got an elephant with a Gucci hat and some Gucci trinkets you put around an elephant. I got my Gucci helicopter in there. It's a party. You gonna see a lot of midgets in this video." That's what I wanted in Privé. Rappers, elephants, Gucci midgets. The funny thing was, for all the drama over getting in (Laio had to catch the bouncer's attention and then bribe him), the club itself was generic. Meanwhile, the adjoining club, Opium Garden, looked like a Coleridge trip come to life. Think "immense dance club outdoors in a Chinese garden." It had no line at all. This is the influence of the Laios at work. If all of the Laios and Suzies in South Beach decided that hanging out at Burger King was cool, you couldn't get your hands on a Whopper Jr. without slipping the drive-thru guy a 20.

Other favorite Laio moments: when we were at the beach and he called and told us that we were at the wrong part of the beach, and the beautiful people were two blocks south. Or when we ordered sushi and he made a point of telling the waiter that he'd eaten at that restaurant the day before and the edamame was too crunchy, and it should be cooked longer next time. Or when he gazed disdainfully at the parade of high-end cars and pronounced, "None of these people live here. They drive in from other places. Anyone who lives in South Beach doesn't take their car out at night." It's not enough to have a nice car—to really fit in you've got to have a nice car but not be bothered to actually drive it. The ultimate would be to buy a Ferrari and just leave it at the dealership.

I appreciated Laio's attempts to show me his favorite places in South Beach, but I think we've got different tastes. He appreciates the finer things, I appreciate renting a Mustang and driving to the nearest hot-body competition to do some hollerin'. Really, the only question is who's cheesier. iB



ONE OF LAIO'S FAVORITE PLACES IS A CLUB CALLED PRIVÉ, WHICH, FORTUNATELY, IS OPEN TO THE PUBLIQUE

LIZ BRUNNER

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

WCVB-TV news anchor Liz Brunner was born in Connecticut and raised in Hawaii and Illinois. After winning the title of Miss Illinois, she earned a bachelor of music degree from Lawrence University's Conservatory of Music in Appleton, Wis., and for several years, she sang and taught music professionally, once even performing for the Pope. Her television career began in 1985 when she became community services representative at WCIA-TV in Champaign, Ill. She then began doing the weather on-air. She worked as morning news anchor and host of a weekend talk show for the CBS affiliate in Tampa, Fla., before joining WCVB in 1993 as a reporter and fill-in anchor on Chronicle. After co-hosting the EyeOpener newscast for several years, she became a co-anchor of the 5:30 and 11 p.m. news. In 1995, she received a regional Emmy. Brunner is actively involved with the March of Dimes, the American Heart Association and the Berkshire Hills Music Academy for Children with Williams Syndrome. She lives in Newton.

Jonathan Soroff: Favorite thing about your job?

Liz Brunner: Well, it's a competitive business, and I like the fact that we have the opportunity to be the first to give people information; the challenge of that, of sharing with people what's going on in the world and why they should care. I also love the things I get to do because I'm in the media. The places, the people, the access. And while I get those perks, they carry with them a responsibility to the public, and I like that balance.

JS: Thing you hate the most?

LB: [Laughs] It's very demanding on your personal life.

JS: Beauty secret?

LB: I don't have any.

JS: Oh, c'mon. How about the eternal tan? Is it a tanning machine, spray-on or what?

LB: I get tan taking the garbage out.

JS: How do you spend your free time?

LB: What free time? [Laughs.] I work out. I spend time with friends. I read. I knit. I love to cook.

JS: Biggest nonstory of your career, when you had to cover something you thought was absurd?

LB: Well, what comes to mind is the story about a man who had been arrested. He had a bullet in his derriere, and he was convinced that when the doctors removed the bullet, they'd put a microphone in its place.

JS: Happens all the time; it's just not well documented. So do you live and die by the ratings?

> [NEWS REPORTERS] DEAL WITH SUCH DEVASTATION EVERY SINGLE DAY. IT WOULD BE GREAT TO SAY THAT THERE'S NO MORE VIOLENCE, NO MORE SUFFERING IN THE WORLD.

LB: No. I try to do my job the same way—to the best of my ability—every single day. Sure, I look at the numbers. But do I think, "Oh God, I've gotta change something because of that?" No. I feel like I'm doing what I'm supposed to be doing. Ratings go up and down. If you live and die by them, you'll have ulcers.

JS: Personal motto?

LB: You never know you can't do something until you try, so you might as well try.

JS: You were Miss Illinois. How'd you get sucked into the pageant thing?

LB: It paid for my education. It was scholarship money. It was a fluke that I got into it, but between that and working in the dish room at Lawrence University, I got through college.

JS: You washed dishes to get through school?

LB: Oh, yeah. And my friends, when they knew I was working, would make their trays so disgustingly awful and put little notes on napkins like, "Hi, Liz!" Because they knew I was in the basement cleaning up their mess.

JS: Greatest lengths you ever had to go to for a story?

LB: Probably dealing with the military for a story on the radar system that keeps track of satellites and missiles. When you're dealing with the military, and top secret stuff, they can be very difficult. I had to work really hard to get inside this facility and shoot video, but I finally did.

JS: One piece of news you'd most like to deliver?

LB: We deal with such devastation every single day. It would be great to say we've stopped terrorism in its tracks. That there's no more violence, and no more suffering in the world. It would be great if we could say nobody is gonna go hungry, and everybody has a home. That may sound Pollyannaish, but I'd like that.

JS: Who would you rather be: Barbara Walters or Diane Sawyer?

LB: Oh, either, or both. They're both outstanding.

JS: Very diplomatic. So who would win in a catfight?

LB: Diane's a bit younger. Maybe she's stronger.

JS: First thing that comes to mind when you turn on the TV and see yourself?

LB: Oh, there I am.

JS: It doesn't freak you out? Aren't you critical?

LB: Sure I am, sometimes. In fact, we just did a promo where I thought they should have used a different take, but we're all critical of ourselves that way. And sure, there are times when I see what I'm wearing and say, "What was I thinking?" But not too often.

JS: Piece of news you'd most like to hear about yourself?

LB: Damn, she's good.

JS: So are all reporters busybodies or gossips?

LB: No. The majority of them are, probably, since it goes hand-in-hand with curiosity, but not everyone's a busybody.

JS: Anchor chair you'd most like to sit in?

LB: The one I'm sitting in.

JS: Do you have a favorite sign-off line?

LB: Have a great weekend.

JS: Weird viewer encounters?

LB: I couldn't even begin to tell you what the weirdest call is that I've gotten, because it's amazing how many people call the newsroom, and it's amazing what they call the newsroom about. But I guess the strangest thing is that a lot of people don't even have a question, or a news tip. They just want someone to listen to them talk.

JS: True or false: All weathermen are liars?

LB: I think our team is pretty accurate.

JS: "Pretty accurate" is different than making a routine snowstorm into the coming of the next ice age. Let's just establish this: The weather is not a story!

LB: You'd be surprised by how many people call when there's weather going on. Whether it's raining, or it's 100 degrees. It affects people, and they want to know, and they react to it. Now, I'll admit that I don't always agree when the weather's our lead story, as often as it is, but it's what people want to know.

JS: OK, name the top things people want to know.

LB: They want to know the weather, the headlines and if their world's gonna be OK.

JS: What about sports scores?

LB: Well, I care about sports scores. Go Red Sox!

JS: Thing about your job that makes you proudest?

LB: When a viewer feels comfortable coming up to me and saying, "I know you're delivering bad news, but somehow coming from you, I know things are going to be OK." That makes me feel like I'm fulfilling some sort of purpose.

JS: OK, fill in the blank: Liz Brunner would like you to know that _____.

LB: That I take my job very seriously, but do have a sense of humor. IB

SAVE THIS MARRIAGE

Boston and Nomar have something worth holding onto

Like any married couple, Boston and Nomar Garciaparra have shared the highest of highs and, yes, sometimes the lowest of lows. Unfortunately, these days we seem to be focusing on the lows, as in Nomar's six weeks from hell last September and October, his nearly being replaced by Alex Rodriguez, his injuries and his contract issues. It hasn't been a pleasant nine months for Nomar.

At times, he has appeared to be unhappy and/or whiny, things Boston fans seem to despise most in an athlete. But we shouldn't forget what this shortstop has meant to the city, the fans and, especially, this baseball team that several million people dearly love.

Ever since he arrived here—Sept. 1, 1996 was his debut—Nomar has accomplished special things. His first major league hit was a home run. He won Rookie of the Year and was the only rookie to play in the 1997 All-Star game, and his 98 RBIs that year were the most ever for a major league leadoff hitter. His 30 homers were an all-time record for rookie shortstops. And as exciting as that first year was, it got better.

In his first playoff series in 1998, he broke an American League Championship Series record with 11 RBIs. In 1999 he was the AL batting champ, hitting .357. He upped that to .372 in 2000 and won again. You want some more?

He was only the fifth player in major league history with 30-plus homers in his first two seasons. His 10 RBIs in one game in 1999 were the most ever for a shortstop. He had a two–grand slam game in 2000. He has put together 21 hitting streaks of 10 games or more. Last year he had a six-for-six game and followed up with a five-hit performance the next day to became the first player in the expansion era to have a five-hit game and a six-hit game in the same week.

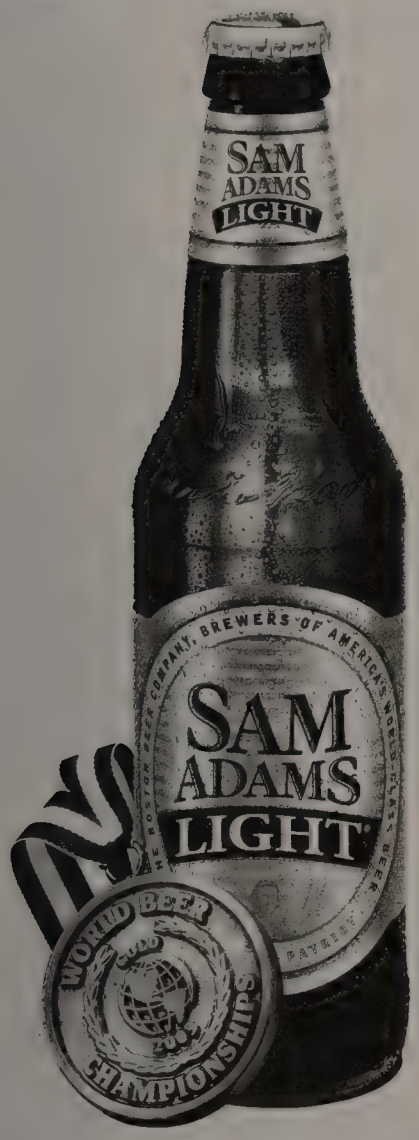
I didn't mean to throw the Bill James book at you, but if the Sox want to go by the numbers, they should be consistent and go by the numbers. This is not merely a good player we're talking about here. This is a special player. Where did it all go wrong?

Some people point toward the Boston media's routine of putting an athlete on a pedestal before bringing him down, others to his courtship and eventual marriage to Mia Hamm during the winter. And Nomar hasn't played all season due to an Achilles tendon injury. But let's be honest, Nomar's problems are as much mental as they are physical. We all know that when he's at 100 percent, he's a Hall of Famer.

Red Sox management deserves its share of the blame in its dealings with Nomar and his relationship with the media hasn't been one of legendary comradeship, but who cares? The more I've talked to him the more I understand. He just doesn't enjoy climbing the wall that's been built between him and the media.

Nomar has a healthy understanding of how fortunate he is to be playing in the majors. So he never wants to take it for granted, which is why he prepares during the off-season with the intensity of a caged animal. How much money does Nomar deserve? I can't put an exact number on it, but he deserves more than the $12 million a year that Miguel Tejada received from the Orioles. Even Nomar's detractors would agree with that.

However, offering a few dollars more than that wouldn't cut it. Nomar deserves better, and so do the fans. When was the last time you heard Nomar's name associated with anything bad off the field? Don't waste your time trying. There isn't one. And Patriots quarterback Tom Brady excluded, nobody in this town can attract the crowd that Nomar stirs up, as I discovered firsthand when he came by the NECN studios for a show last month. As we spoke in the parking lot after the show, every single person that walked by stopped. Every single one. And believe it or not, it wasn't because of my own sparkling personality.



> THIS IS NOT MERELY A GOOD PLAYER WE'RE TALKING ABOUT HERE. THIS IS A SPECIAL PLAYER. WHERE DID IT ALL GO WRONG?

That's his life. It never ends. It's when he is on the baseball field, he is at peace. So don't give up on Nomar just yet. While it hasn't always seemed that way, Nomar and Boston are made for each other. Both love baseball as if it were a family member. Any marriage with such great beginnings is worth saving, including this one. iB

30 THINGS TO DO THIS SUMMER

YOU KNOW THAT HANGDOG FEELING COME THE FALL FROST? THAT REMORSE FOR ALL THE FUN STUFF YOU DIDN'T DO WHEN THE WEATHER WAS WARM? DON'T LET THAT BE YOU THIS YEAR.

BY JULIE SURATT

After a brutal winter and a virtually nonexistent spring, Bostonians can't afford to fritter away the precious summer days. When the warm weather finally arrives, you need a plan of action for squeezing every last drop of enjoyment out of those brief summer months. We've got you covered there with the to-do list to end all to-do lists for a truly fulfilling summer—activities to take part in, food and drinks to savor, places to visit. What are you waiting for?

Go picnicking

A bottle of wine, a loaf of French bread, a couple of different types of cheese, olives, grapes…or a Happy Meal. A picnic can be anything you want—all you need is a patch of grass and a warm, dry day. Grab a blanket and head to the banks of the Charles River near the Harvard Boat House on the Boston side, or to the Hatch Shell, Jamaica Pond, Larz Anderson Park in Brookline, the Public Garden or the Common.

Go canoeing on the Charles River

If you thought the view of the Boston skyline from the Longfellow Bridge was impressive, wait till you see it from a canoe in the middle of the Charles. Rent a canoe at Charles River Canoe & Kayak, just up the river from Harvard Square, and paddle downstream for a wild time in the city. Located on the Boston side of the Charles River, upstream from the Eliot Bridge, on Soldiers Field Road. (617-462-2513).

Shop at a farmers' market. From May through November, Massachusetts farmers load freshly picked strawberries, corn, peppers, peaches, cucumbers and other fruits and vegetables onto their trucks and head to designated markets throughout the metropolitan area. From Copley Square (Tuesdays, Fridays, 11 am–6 pm) and City Hall Plaza (Mondays, Wednesdays, 11 am–6 pm) to the suburbs, these are the spots to get the freshest local produce. The choice is yours: mealy tomatoes from a bin at the supermarket or juicy red ones right off the vine? www.massfarmersmarkets.org.

Go swimming at the Colonnade Hotel. An oasis amid the hustle and bustle of the city, the Colonnade's rooftop pool is truly a find. The elevator whisks you and your juiciest summer read 11 stories up and deposits you in heaven...or as close as you can get in Boston. On your way to your lounge chair, grab a towel from the cabana and a piña colada from the bar. You may never come down. 120 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-424-7000). 8 am–8 pm. $40.

Dance the tango by moonlight. The Tango Society of Boston offers the perfect recipe for a romantic night: a full moon, Argentinean music and tango dancing on a bridge over the Charles River. Join in the dance, or simply watch from the riverbank. Weeks Bridge, near Harvard Square. June 5, July 4, July 31, Aug. 30 and Sept. 27. (617-699-6246). www.bostontango.org.

Attend a religious feast in the North End. A half dozen men tote a replica of St. Anthony festooned with dollar bills through the narrow streets of the North End, while thousands of revelers feast on crusty rolls stuffed with spiced beef and cheese, sip homemade red wine, and dance to the tunes of the Roma Band and the North End Band. Skip the Cape and escape to Italy at any of the North End's nine festivals, held on weekends from June through August. See www.northendboston.com for a schedule of this year's festivals.

Watch Shakespeare under the stars. Pack a picnic basket with gourmet goodies, grab a couple of lawn chairs and get thee to either the Publick Theatre, which features Troilus and Cressida (beginning July 8) and The Merchant of Venice (beginning July 29) on the banks of the Charles River, or Shakespeare on the Common, which presents Much Ado About Nothing on the Boston Common July 10–Aug. 1. www.publictheatre.org or www.commonwealthshakespeare.org.

Walk through the Arnold Arboretum. Most Bostonians have yet to explore these 265 acres of wilderness within the city limits. In the summer, lush greenery overhead provides a respite from the hot sun. Walk along the paths through meadows, into the woods and around ponds, taking note of the more than 4,000 woody plants. 125 Arborway, Jamaica Plain (617-524-1718). www.arboretum.harvard.edu.

Dine alfresco. An hour's wait? Fine. It's worth it to dine under the stars. Don't miss the garden seating at Cambridge's Oleana or Harvest, or the Hungry I on Charles Street; the people-watching at Armani Café, Sonsie or Stephanie's on Newbury, or the Parish Café around the corner on Boylston; the water views at Zephyr on the Charles in Cambridge, or Oceana on the waterfront; or the rooftop dining at the Rattlesnake in the Back Bay.

Take a ferry to one of the Boston Harbor Islands

Even on the most scorching August day, you'll feel a cool breeze on the ride to one of the 34 islands in Boston Harbor. Nature lovers can hike trails lined with wildflowers on Grape and Bumpkin islands, while history buffs can tour Fort Warren on Georges Island, where Union soldiers trained and Confederate soldiers were imprisoned during the Civil War. www.bostonislands.com.

BONUS POINTS

Walk sections of the new Boston HarborWalk, which follows the waterfront (with a couple of breaks) from Dorchester to East Boston.

Take sailing lessons at Boston Sailing Center at Rowes Wharf (617-227-4198) or Community Boating on the Charles River Esplanade (617-523-1038).

Lobster roll at Jasper White's Summer Shack

So many places manage to ruin a lobster roll: the wrong roll, too little lobster meat, too much mayo, forgetting to add a little veggie crunch. But Jasper White does it right, combining the perfect proportions of lobster, mayo (just a dab), tarragon and cucumbers on a toasted, buttered hot dog roll. It's a taste of the Cape, without the traffic. 149 Alewife Brook Parkway, Cambridge (617-520-9500); 50 Dalton St., Boston (617- 867-9955).

Fried clams at Woodman's. Steve Woodman, grandson of the founder of Woodman's of Essex, is so confident his clams are the best that he's willing to divulge the recipe (consider it his proverbial throwing down of the gauntlet). Freshly shucked clams are dipped in milk, then rolled in corn flour and fried to crispy, golden perfection. Dunk one of these suckers in Aunt Joane's tartar sauce, and you'll understand why folks wait in line for nearly an hour in the summer. 121 Main St., Essex (800-649-1773).

A fruit smoothie. The next best thing to a colorful cocktail in the summer is a fruit smoothie. Among our local favorites: Jamba Juice at Boston University's George Sherman Union, the Wrap/Jera's Juice (several locations), Blue Shirt Café in Davis Square and the juice stand in the Harvard Square T station.

A sausage and a beer. But not just any sausage and beer. A sweet Italian sausage with peppers and onions from the Sausage Guy outside Fenway Park, followed by a cold Bud on the bleacher seats. 'Nuff said. www.sausageguy.com

Pick your own berries. It's a well-known fact: Berries taste better when you pick them yourself. Try Marino Lookout Farm in South Natick and Land's Sake in Weston for strawberries, blueberries and raspberries; Verrill Farm in Concord for raspberries and strawberries; and Russell Orchards in Ipswich for all of the above, plus blackberries. www.pickyourown.org.

A glass of lemoncello in the North End. Why have lemonade when you can sip lemoncello? This Italian liqueur infused with the rinds of lemons and served ice cold is a postdinner staple in Italy. You can find it at just about any restaurant in the North End, or you can purchase your own bottle of Sogno di Sorrento (a highly rated brand) from V. Cirace & Son and keep it stashed in your freezer for hot summer nights. V. Cirace & Son, 173 North St., Boston (617-227-3193). $21.99.

A frozen margarita. The day the delicious margarita met a blenderful of crushed ice was a glorious one for cocktail lovers everywhere, and most of the Tex-Mex joints in this town serve up some creative north-of-the-border versions. Try passion fruit at the Cactus Club on Boylston, melon at Harvard Square's Border Café, banana at Fajitas & 'Ritas downtown, or prickly pear at the Cottonwood Café, on Berkeley Street.

A soft-serve ice cream from the Frosty Truck. These days, it's surprisingly difficult to find soft-serve ice cream (not to be confused with frozen yo). Mr. Frosty parks on Boylston Street next to the Public Garden every day, and the line has been known to stretch around the corner and down Arlington Street. A vanilla-chocolate swirl is just what the doctor ordered.

Gelato

On a hot summer day, there's no treat to match rich and creamy nocciola (hazelnut) gelato served in a colorful cup with a tiny spoon. Café Paradiso, Caffé Vittoria and Mike's Pastry in the North End; Athan's and Zathmary's in Brookline; and Giordano's in Belmont all serve it. Go get some.

Raspberry lime rickey

The quintessential summer drink in New England (circa 1950), a raspberry lime rickey is a refreshing mix of raspberry syrup, lime juice, club soda and a wedge of lime. It's the perfect thirst-quencher, and you can find it at Bartley's Burger Cottage, Charlie's Kitchen and Johnny's Luncheonette, all in Harvard Square, or at any JP Licks or Brigham's, among other spots.

BONUS POINTS

Try all 36 flavors at the Scooper Bowl at City Hall Plaza, June 8–10. $7. (800-525-4669).

The Big E

Nothing finishes off the summer like the Eastern States Exposition (better known as the Big E) in West Springfield. Picture an enormous county fair hosted by all six New England states, with agricultural exhibitions, amusement rides, games, concerts, circuses, parades, crafts and cooking contests. *1305 Memorial Ave., West Springfield (413-205-5115). www.thebige.com. Freeport, Maine. Nowadays, there are plenty of outlet malls closer to home, but Freeport remains the granddaddy of outlet shopping. More than 80 factory outlets, stores and boutiques surround the three-floor L.L. Bean mothership, and most are within walking distance of each other. Round out the afternoon with lunch at Harraseeket Lunch and Lobster. www.freeportusa.com.

Blue Hills. Only eight miles from the city you'll find true wilderness. To navigate the more than 7,000 acres of forest land—with marshes, swamps, ponds, meadows, and even an Atlantic white cedar bog—you'll need hiking boots and a map, which you can pick up at the Trailside Museum on Route 138 in Canton. From the rocky summit of Great Blue Hill—a half-mile hike straight up—you'll get a stunning view of Boston and beyond. www.state.ma.us/mdc/blue.htm.

Martha's Vineyard. Rent mopeds, ride the Flying Horses Carousel in Oak Bluffs, get an ice cream at Mad Martha's, take in the view at Gay Head, ride the waves at Katama Beach, buy a T-shirt at the Black Dog Bakery, take the ferry to Chappaquiddick, go shopping in Edgartown and get another ice cream at Mad Martha's…and that's just on the first day. www.mvy.com. iB

Tanglewood

You've lived in Boston for how long and you've never been to Tanglewood?! Shame on you. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra let down their hair and get playful in the summer, offering outdoor performances of jazz, classical and pop music practically every night of the week. Pack a picnic (don't forget the wine opener) and stretch out on the lawn amid the Berkshires' beauty. www.bso.org.

BONUS POINTS

Spend a weekend in Montreal—a direct flight from Logan arrives in under two hours.

Watch the sun rise from the top of Cadillac Mountain in Acadia National Park in Bar Harbor, Maine.

Climb Mount Washington, three hours north of Boston, near North Conway, New Hampshire.

FANEUIL HALL MARKETPLACE IN SUMMER DEFINES THE WORD "BUSTLING." WHAT DOES IT TAKE TO KEEP THE HORDES HERE ENTERTAINED? WE VISIT THIS YEAR'S STREET PERFORMER AUDITIONS TO FIND OUT.

THE GARGOYLES

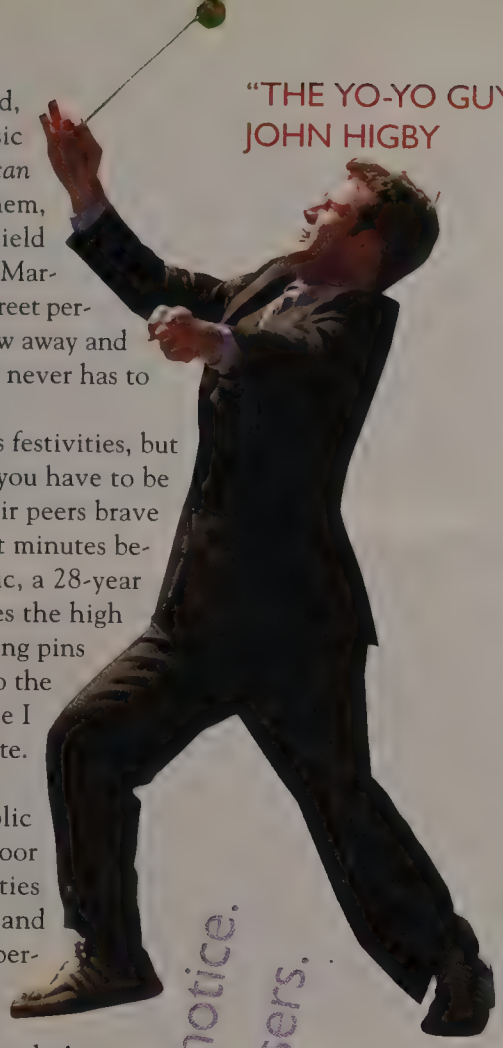
he wind starts to pick up at Quincy Market's west end, where Mike Ceceri, publicist for the North Shore Music Theatre, is seated next to two other judges, American l–style. A couple of metal partitions topple over around them, using a string of decorative balloons to pop. Spectators shield eir eyes and turn up the collars on their coats; Faneuil Hall Marplace workers scramble to restore order minutes before the street permer auditions are about to begin. A tablecloth begins to blow away and ceri splays out flamboyantly to keep it down. "Paula Abdul never has to l with this," he says.

The late-April weather will not cooperate much for today's festivities, but en you work the famous cobblestones at Quincy Market, you have to be pared for anything. Some of the performers, watching their peers brave elements, decide to eliminate a trick or two from their act minutes be- they are about to go on; others, like Chuckles the Komic, a 28-year et-performing veteran, persevere. When Chuckles realizes the high ds will not allow him to pull off his signature trick—juggling pins le balancing a wheelbarrow on his forehead—he remarks to the ng girl passing him the pins, "OK, now run like hell, 'cause I not that good." The audience laughs, and the judges take note. pite the failed stunt, Chuckles ends up making the cut.



or 19 years, Faneuil Hall Marketplace has conducted public itions to select the acts who will perform for the outdoor wds at Quincy Market during the summer. Many U.S. cities e similar public venues—such as San Francisco's Pier 39 and West's Mallory Square. But according to most of today's perners, Quincy Market is the best venue in the country for elty acts—entertainers who do card tricks, illusions, yo-yo s, juggling, miming or anything else that draws a crowd. At today's tions, spectators come and go, though the size of the audience rens steady at about 150.

bout three dozen acts are selected each year for Faneuil Hall's mer program. In the past, judges were culled from various shops in the market and from Faneuil Hall Marketplace management ; even veteran performers helped, evaluating the new talent. year, however, was the first time that expert talent finders were ght in, to lend an air of professionalism to the auditions.

n, of the Jim Show, a 12-year Faneuil Hall veteran who lives merville, kicks off the audition event and stays on to emcee. ng the short breaks in between acts, he's responsible for holdhe attention of the spectators. He also has to coax acts that ver their allotted time of 10 minutes (in some cases, by al- five minutes) to wrap it up. A member of the management is seated at the end of the judges' table with signs to tell the rmer that only two minutes, then one minute, of the ald time remain, but Jim must step in a couple of times with le acerbic humor.

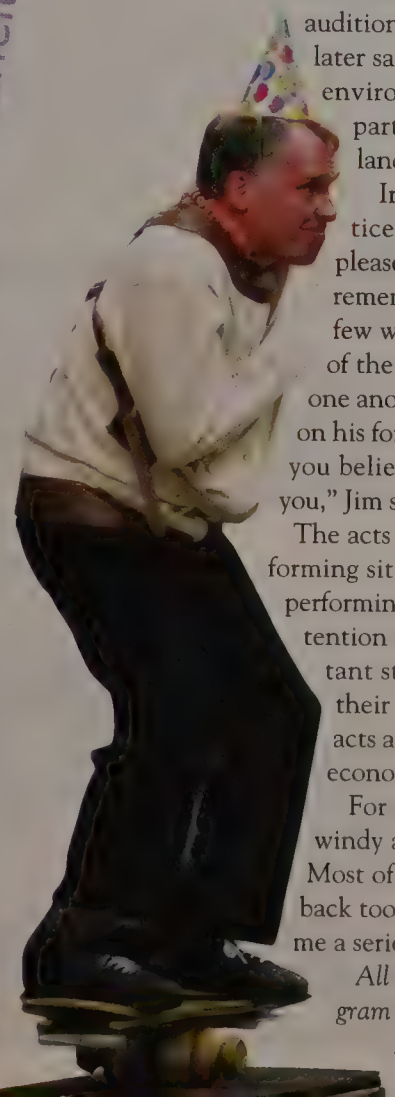
e performers' livelihoods for the summer hang in the nce today. If they don't impress the judges, low marks ikely influence management's decision on whether they ut on the schedule or get the hook. Missing the cut d mean more kids' birthday parties and corporate ts to earn a buck, or more trips to Harvard Square to er hone the act. "There's a certain level of pressure," Anne Goldmann, fixing her bright pink tutu. "We've here for two years and we still don't feel all that esshed." Goldmann is one half of the Daredevil ken Club, an acrobatic act that consists of her and ancé, Jonathan Taylor, both of Jamaica Plain. Tayds, "You can't get lazy." The judges like the act se of their interaction with the audience, and uo earns a coveted summer slot.

niel Forlano, a Northampton resident who per- under the name Stitch, blends into the audiafter his routine, in which he balances high up adder. "I've been here for four years now," he "I sure hope I make it." Although his act turns be a favorite among the judges, Forlano rewhat happened at a tryout a few years ago: ended up pulling me off," he says, explainat his act wasn't yet fully developed and of his humor might not have been appropriate. "Needless to say I didn't make the program that year, and I didn't bother showing my face at auditions the following year either," he says laughing. You'll see Stitch this summer at Faneuil Hall, though.

"THE YO-YO GUY"
JOHN HIGBY

In a day full of similar acts, it's personality that the judges notice. Self-deprecating humor and spontaneity are crowd-pleasers.

BLAIR TOLLESSON



The afternoon is stressful not only for the performers, but also for judge Anne-Celeste Anders, director of corporate sales for South Weymouth–based Fun Enterprises Inc. Anders, who books many of these same acts for company parties, outing venues and other clients, says her heart went out to all the performers. "At first, I thought I was rating people too high," she says. "They're going to think, 'Oh my God, she liked almost everybody!'" According to Janine Crisostamo, marketing coordinator for Faneuil Hall Marketplace, summer performers are chosen based on a number of criteria—judges consider appearance, skill level and their overall impression of an act.

Ceceri, however, is ready to be ruthless, though if he blasts an act, he says, it's out of honesty. "I think, if I were there with my young nephews, what would I watch?" One performer, a juggler, Ceceri says, "took forever to get into the act. I looked around and saw people leaving." That act will be playing a lot of Harvard Square this summer.

Judges were particularly keen on how a performer interacts with the audience. Ceceri says he was a little hesitant at the start of the Gargoyles' unique freeze-modeling act, which has worked successfully at Quincy Market for a couple of years. But when he noticed some kids enjoying their antics, he gave them high marks. Etienne, who puts on a French accent and performs yo-yo and ladder stunts, seems to have a good rapport with the crowd. But because he goes on so late in the afternoon, his tricks have a "been there, done that" feel. He chides the audience to clap for him, saying, "My job is on the line." Indeed it is. Au revoir.

Early in the auditions, all the acts seem pretty distinct. By the end of the day, however, the judges' heads are swimming. Anders turns to Ceceri and jokes, "If I see another magic rope, I'll ask them to make a noose out of it." They're thankful that they meticulously filled out evaluation forms between each act—those will help them remember who was who.

While it sounds like there's an advantage to an early slot, it doesn't guarantee a successful audition. I bump into the Balloongineer—Royal Sorell of Peabody—in the parking garage a half hour before he's scheduled to go on. Sorell has a regular gig at Fenway Park and is leaving the day after the auditions for California and a stint at Disneyland. One of the judges later says the act wasn't spontaneous enough for such a competitive environment. "It seemed to me to be more geared to a controlled party atmosphere," the judge confides. It may work in Disneyland, but it didn't make the cut for Faneuil Hall this year.

In a day full of similar acts, it's personality that the judges notice. Self-deprecating humor and spontaneity are real crowd-pleasers. Jim of the Jim Show says the best acts are those where you remember the performer more than what he or she did. He cites a few who don't do anything particularly flamboyant, including two of the afternoon's last acts—Dave Buchanan, who pits kids against one another in races for money, and Peter Gross, who sticks a plunger on his forehead and asks audience members to toss rings at him. ("Can you believe this is my audition?" he remarks.) "That's the street for you," Jim says.

The acts all agree that the auditions don't represent a true-to-life performing situation because a crowd is already gathered for them. When performing during the summer, they say, catching that first person's attention is essential. What's more, the audition lacks the most important step of all: the hat pitch, where performers essentially make their living. Some of the older performers note that almost all the acts auditioning are solo performers; group acts just no longer work economically, unless they're husband and wife.

For most people, it's an enjoyable afternoon, even though it's windy and very chilly once the sun falls behind the main building. Most of the performers will be back next year. Ceceri hopes he'll be back too. "I'd love to do it every year," he says. "Maybe CBS can give me a series."

All the performers from Faneuil Hall Marketplace's Summer Program appear at the Faneuil Hall Street Performers Festival May 29–31, 11 am–7 pm. iB

Labor Day Weekend, Sept. 3
Art Association: Fall Consignment Auction, Sept.

Boston has plenty to offer residents and visitors during the summer months, from an evening in the bleachers at Fenway watching the Sox to a seat at a sidewalk café on Newbury Street watching the world go by. But there's a lot to be said for getting the hell out of the Hub when the weather turns nice.

While a day at the beach is enough for some people, others want a little more variety on their days off. They want to do things like shop in stores both fine and funky, eat anything from a foot-long hot dog to a five-course meal, stroll through a fine art gallery then search for bargains in a tacky gift shop. They want dinner and a drag show followed by a night of wild, uninhibited dancing in a club. In other words, they need to go to Provincetown.

Now, if the idea of going to Provincetown causes a knee-jerk, "I'm not gay" reaction, relax. While it's true that the tiny town at the tip of Cape Cod has a tradition of tolerance, that only means residents will be that much more accepting of you, even if you're an uptight family from the suburbs looking for a fun place to bring the kids for the day.

"It's the kind of town where you can just come down on the spur of the moment and enjoy the day or see a show," says Daniel Kells, "or you can plan on spending a week and just relax and explore all the town has to offer." Kells is executive director of the Provincetown Theater, a new facility opening June 22 that will be home to the town's two ing theatrical companies—the Provincetown T Company and the Provincetown Repertory Theat well as hosting various touring shows.

From top of page: Provincetown's town beach, off Commercial Street; low tide at the town beach; people-watching on the patio at Bubala's by the Bay

Theater has long been a part of the Provincetow munity, Kells explains, dating back to 1916, wh Provincetown Players presented the debut of E O'Neill's first play, Bound East for Cardiff, sparkin many (particularly the locals) consider the birth c ern American drama. Richard Gere, Lily Tomlin, cino, James Woods and five-time Tony Award winn Harris have all performed in Provincetown on thei up the ladder of fame. And while the show has gone on, the town has not had a permanent profe theater space since a fire destroyed the Playhouse Wharf in 1977.

Getting to Provincetown is a lot easier than you think, particularly if you don't mind starting your ture with a short ocean voyage. Boston Harbor Cru fers daily trips on a high-speed catamaran that tra you from Long Wharf to MacMillan Wharf in just utes. The cost for a round-trip ticket is $58 for a and $48 for a child. With gas prices upwards of $ lon, Cape-bound traffic that can back up for miles sides of the bridges, and less parking than the Sou on street-cleaning day, why would you ever d e arts and local crafts have been an important part e community almost since Provincetown was d, and the tradition thrives to this day. Every Fri- ght, for example, art galleries in the east end of throw open their doors to host new works and ex- ns. Fans of contemporary art can check out the collection at the Rice/Polak Gallery, which kicks off its Friday night series on July 2 with a show featuring paintings by Michele Harvey and Steven Skollar, charcoal landscapes by Katherine Meyer and sculpture by David Mitchell. Aficionados who want to explore the history of art by Provincetown artists can stroll through the Julie Heller Gallery or the William Scott Gallery, where they'll not only find work from some of the best artists of Provincetown's past, like Ross Moffett and Patricia Phillips, but can explore the art of contemporary painters like Polly Burnell and Patrick Webb, who are keeping Provincetown's creative flame alive.

If you've got the time, you can even check out the Fine Arts Work Center, whose offerings include workshops on painting and sculpture as well as classes on writing fiction and poetry.

When it comes time to refuel, Provincetown ranks second to none in the variety of food it offers. If you're not ready to sit down and enjoy a full meal, there are plenty of places to graze. You can follow your nose to the Provincetown Portuguese Bakery & Coffee Shop and pick up a chunk of warm fried dough or linguica-stuffed bread. If you have a sweet tooth, ask one of the counter people to recommend a homemade Portuguese pastry.

Those who like to dine casually with a view have their choice of scenery at Bubala's by the Bay. You can sit outside along Commercial Street and feel a part of the scene as you nibble salmon tartare or slurp down some oysters. There is also seating at the back of the restaurant overlooking the ocean—there you can feel like you're miles away from the hustle and bustle as you crack open a lobster or enjoy your dessert.

If you're looking to go a bit more upscale, check out Napi's, a unique restaurant occupying a collection of buildings that once housed a string of auto garages. It's located a block off the main drag, on Freeman Street. Along with pouring some classic cocktails, Napi's offers a wide-ranging à la carte menu featuring everything from Brazilian shrimp to Russian oysters. The King's Feast (bouillabaisse and lobster for two) is a perfect way to make a romantic meal memorable.

The best way to discover what Provincetown has in store for you this summer is to get down there and explore it for yourself. IB ou entered the lottery for Green Monster seats at Fenway Park and lost. You entered for the right-field roof seats and struck out again. Eventually, deranged with the desire to attend a real, professional baseball game, you bought bleacher seats for a sday night game against the Tampa Bay Devil Rays. Sigh. Well, be it's time to expand your search beyond the hallowed walls of way Park and consider catching a minor league game or two this mer. Chances are you won't have heard of the players (although etimes a Rickey Henderson or Jose Canseco comes through on downside of their career). But the price is right, tickets are easy et and the game is still played at a level that corporate-league ball heroes can only dream of reaching.

PLAY BALL

TIRED OF PAYING FOR RED SOX TICKETS—IF YOU CAN EVEN GET THEM? SEVERAL MINOR LEAGUE BASEBALL TEAMS SPRUNG UP AROUND BOSTON TO PROVIDE A "TAKE ME OUT TO THE BALL GAME" EXPERIENCE WITH A FRACTION OF THE HA

lost casual baseball fans know about the Pawtucket Red Sox, the ox' AAA club that's the last stop before the Big Show. But as descend the ladder, the team names become less familiar. The land (Maine) Sea Dogs, the Red Sox' AA affiliate, enjoy a rabid base, but even many so-called diehards would be hard-pressed to e the Sox' local single-A team—the Lowell Spinners. Yet these ntial future Red Sox stars play barely a half-hour away in a sta- that opened in 1998. Price for a premium box seat: $7.50.

lsewhere, the stadiums (and sometimes the teams themselves) even newer. The Northeast League's Brockton Rox christened panelli Stadium in 2002. The Nashua (N.H.) Pride's Holman lium underwent a $4.5 million renovation that same year. And nn, North Shore Spirit owner and former State Street honcho Lopardo instituted a $3.5 million overhaul of historic Fraser last year. Why all the recent interest—and investment—in r league ball?

's absolutely taking off," Lopardo says, "because it's more than baseball—it's affordable family entertainment. Our most expen- seat, 60 feet from home plate, is $8. And you're six inches closer the pitcher. It's easy to get here, there's good parking, and g kids are just as thrilled to stand in front of the fence and get tograph here as they are at Fenway. Besides the level of player access, minor league teams also embrace a playfulness that's missing at the major league level, the antics of the Philly Phanatic notwithstanding. This year, on Aug. 14, the Spinners host "World's Largest Game of Duck, Duck, Goose" Night. The Spirit holds frequent contests between innings, such as dizzy bat races, a "waiter race," which involves carrying drinks, and the toilet bowl toss, in which contestants throw plungers at a toilet bowl from 20 feet away. "We have promotions between every inning," says Lopardo. "It's a lot more fun here than it is when you're paying somebody $17 million a year." (Northern League teams adhere to a $90,000 salary cap, and the Spirit's highest-paid player makes $3,000 per month.)

The most outlandish promotions belong to the Rox, who employ Mike Veeck as a consultant. Serious baseball fans might recognize the Veeck name: Mike is the son of Bill Veeck, the former major league team owner who famously sent a midget, the 3'7" Eddie Gaedel, to pinch-hit for the St. Louis Browns in a 1951 game (Gaedel walked). The Rox' most high-profile stunt last year involved signing Late Show with David Letterman stage manager Biff Henderson and sending him to the plate as leadoff man (he struck out swinging). "My favorite memory," says Veeck, "was at the Rox' first-ever home game. It was rained out, but Bill Murray led the Brockton High School marching band in a stirring rendition of 'Mustang Sally.'"

Veeck echoes Lopardo's sentiment that major-league teams are stuffy in comparison with the minor league clubs, pointing to Major League Baseball's recent reversal of a deal that would have promoted the upcoming Spider-Man 2 movie by putting logos on bases around the league for a weekend. "I think the Spider-Man thing is a tremendous idea," says Veeck. "We're selling the Rox' bases to Wite-Out! We're protecting the integrity of the game!"

Veeck, who works with five other minor league teams around the country, says that the popularity of the Red Sox creates a positive trickle-down effect for the area's other baseball teams. "It's the best minor league situation you could have in the country," he says. "There is nowhere I've ever operated that has the wonderful effect that Red Sox Nation has on the minors here."

ly half the players watch the game from the dugout, while the s lean against the fence and chat with fans in the seats. The s gregarious players, combined with the tall pine trees that ring nce beyond the outfield and obscure the world beyond the sta- give the scene a New England–style Field of Dreams vibe. That g is underscored when you see the guy running the show in the dugout. If he looks familiar, that's because he's former Red Sox r Butch Hobson. These guys might not all be major league , but what are the chances that Manny's going to shoot the bull he fans between innings at Fenway? Some players, however, do into the majors, such as Red Sox slugger Kevin Millar, an rthern Leaguer (former Northern League player personnel direc- d current Brockton Rox owner Van Schley brokered the deal). ybe you'll get a chance to say, "I got his autograph when…"

It's not just a case of the minor league teams leeching fans away from Fenway, however. "We help create baseball fans," Veeck says. "The players in the minor leagues are hungry, and they'll do nearly anything for the fans. They realize that the game isn't really about the players, it's about the fans. You let a 7-year-old kid meet some players, get some autographs and have a good time, you've got a fan for life."

Veeck sees the relationship between the Sox and the minor league teams as truly symbiotic. "We give people the baseball experience for a fraction of the price of going to a Red Sox game. People can go to seven or eight Rox games for the price of a couple Red Sox games. But you know what? Eventually they're going to want to see the game played at its highest level. Eventually, they're gonna go to Mecca, baby." iB

MOPSY

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

SISTERS OVER TIME, AND SIZE

In The Weight of It, author Amy Wilensky describes her sister's battle with obesity as the two girls grew up in Sudbury.

One sister, writer Amy Wilensky, grows up "a scrawny kid." Her younger sister Alison, however, begins to inflate, and by age 16 has attained that frightening status known as morbid obesity. This is the painful contrast played out between the effortlessly thin Amy and her suffering sister. Alison diets sometimes, refuses to diet at others, and sometimes binge-eats in private. When she loses some weight, paradoxically, she feels less secure. Humiliations (after being seated by a waiter in an inconspicuous part of a restaurant, she subsequently storms out) competitions (as girls they make homemade barrettes, and as it happens, Amy's sell and Alison's do not) and storms of defiance (slicing up a coat her mother suggests Alison wear) characterize the girls' adolescent years. Sent to a psychiatrist, she brings a tiny TV and watches it throughout the hour. In her late 20s Alison loses 200 pounds through gastric bypass surgery. Throughout, Alison is a wonderfully flamboyant, colorful character beloved by many friends. She goes to art school and later becomes a chef in the South End. And when Alison is no longer the fat sheep of the family, sisterly dynamics shift in subtle ways.

Allan Denchfield of Carrier & Ives moving company, and now A Moves, organizes, cleans up and moves things into and around spaces big and small. $50 per hour ($25 off the fourth hour). Call 617-492-4888.

Decades of experience as the owner of the punningly named moving company Carrier & Ives have acquainted Allan Denchfield with the many spatial needs people have when moving or reorganizing. He's seen chaos and debris, then brought clarity and resolution. With A Moves, his new "à la carte" incarnation, he'll help you reclaim crowded spaces, putting things up on pallets, or removing them temporarily to a storage space—where triage can happen in an emotionally cooler spot. It's instant minimalism. In his courtly way, Denchfield has facilitated the annual migration of one lady to her summer quarters and moved prominent families across town, cross-country and into assisted living. Charities, individuals or the dump will become the repository of the discarded. He can disassemble and reassemble bulky enormities, package stuff for mailing and "hang curtains or Rembrandts." Should you rent a van, he'll load, drive it if you want and reorganize stuff at the other end. Described by one client as "sensitive to moving issues—the fatigue, sadness and ambivalence relocation entails," Denchfield works to make you and your space sprucer, cleaner, Zennier.

WOMEN YOU CAN LOOK UP TO

The Tall Girls Shop, at 211 Berkeley St. in Boston, clothes the height-ful. Call 617-424-7164.

It's almost a miracle that people come in here already dressed, given the lengthy specificity of their needs. The long, long legs of jeans dangle, extending seemingly eternally from the towering racks. Catering to those 5'8" and on up to the ceiling-scraping heights of 6'6", the Tall Girls Shop carries business clothes, casual wear, digitally extended gloves, longer panty hose (an issue even for shorter women), gym apparel, jeans and sleepwear. Inseams of 36-38 inches are available. Some lines offer stretchy polyester or spandex in the waist, giving tummy control for that midsection located closer to others' eye level. Clothes also come in junior and misses' sizes, since both younger and older women come in Tall. Brands include Haggar—12 kinds of jeans—Neva, Bullet, French Dressing and fancy Pendleton wool suits made longer and with extended torsos. Without having to go up a size to get the fit, girls, women and even cross-dressers gravitate to this grail of just-rightness. Once exposed to this store, customers have wept, or bought $3,000 worth of clothes; some stock up on, for instance, Capri pants that aren't just regular pants marooned at the ankle.

DOWN-TO-EARTH DOM'S

This North End spot delivers some primo pasta dishes and a homey ambience

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

At the end of Bartlett Place—a short alley off Salem Street in the North End—is a small, unprepossessing, almost funky little building housing a restaurant called Dom's. Although I've been passing by this spot for over a decade on my way to my barber shop, Dom's had never really caught my eye until recently, when a food-conscious colleague who lives in the North End mentioned that it was one of her favorite eating places in the neighborhood.

Dom's has two entrances: From the front, a foyer leads up a half flight of stairs to a small dining room overlooking Salem Street, a lively, noisy scene on a warm Saturday evening. A side entrance leads down a few stairs to a quieter venue appointed in exposed brick, blind arcades with framed prints hung below the arches, a well-placed mirror, wrought iron sconces and a scattering of wine bottles, ranging from straw covered fiaschi to a multiliter jeroboam. White tablecloths and cotton napkins folded into fans create a pleasant dining environment, marred only by chairs that are slightly uncomfortable and in some cases, wobbly.

A small booklet serves as Dom's menu, providing a chatty description of the kitchen's offerings, complete with recommendations and an invitation to discuss particular dishes and combinations with owners Dom Capossela or Marcello Bravo (Bravo is also the chef). In welcome contrast to so many restaurants that discourage patrons from departing from the menu as written, Dom's earnestly strives to satisfy every request. One evening I expressed indecision about which of several appetizers to choose, and Capossela suggested a tasting assortment ($7.50). These antipasti came in two waves, starting with a platter of stuffed zucchini, baked eggplant and marinated peppers. The zucchini was stuffed with mascarpone cheese, onion and garlic, topped with a sprinkling of seasoned bread crumbs and broiled in a way that preserved the al dente texture and fresh flavor of the zucchini. Hearty slices of baked eggplant were enriched with a touch of fontina cheese, richly seasoned tomato sauce and fresh ground pepper. Piquant strips of roasted red peppers, skinned and marinated in olive oil, garlic and Mediterranean herbs—at once sweet and tangy—added a delightfully savory dimension to this trio of vegetable antipasti. Immediately upon removing the empty platter, Capossela brought a fourth appetizer of creamy fresh mozzarella cheese with pleasantly salty prosciutto and slices of fresh tomatoes sprinkled with chopped parsley, slightly moistened with a fruity extra-virgin olive oil. Although slightly cold from the refrigerator, the combination nevertheless proved a refreshing, vibrantly flavored counterpoint to the vegetables that preceded it.

Dom's credible antipasti set the stage for the most enjoyable part of its repertoire: the pastas. Three varieties of imported dry pasta (penne, linguini, and capellini d'angeli, or angel hair), four kinds of fresh pasta (gnocchi, fusilli, tagliatelle, and girello—sheets of unstuffed lasagna) and ravioli with four different fillings provided an astounding array of pasta choices. The menu offers nine sauce selections—described with painstaking detail and in almost reverent tones—to accompany these 10 pastas, resulting in a number of possible pasta-and-sauce combinations to tax anyone's arithmetic prowess.

On my first visit I opted for the ravioli tasting ($11), a quartet of ravioli: One, stuffed with ricotta, Parmesan, and Romano cheeses and dressed with a simple marinara sauce, was unremarkable but pleasant. Another was filled with lobster and ricotta and dressed with tomato cream sauce. This more ambitious undertaking didn't quite reach its aspirations due to the dry, uninteresting lobster. The other two ravioli—one stuffed with goat cheese and covered with a superb basil-packed pesto sauce, and one filled with portobello and shiitake mushrooms and dressed with a spicy puttanesca sauce—proved to be the most provocative and memorable. Unfortunately for all four of the ravioli, the dense texture of the pasta itself detracted from appreciation of their varied and delicious fillings.

Puttanesca sauce consists of tomatoes, garlic, capers, olives, scallions and onions, and takes its name from the Italian word for a lady of the night—the ingredients are dictated by what might be left in the refrigerator at the end of a slow week. Dom's puttanesca, lively with fresh tomatoes, enhanced the perfect, al dente texture of its first-rate fresh tagliatelle—flat noodles wider than linguini but narrower than fettucini. Dom's angel hair was just a trifle overdone—this very thin pasta challenges the most precise of kitchens to avoid turning it into a sticky mess by leaving it seconds too long in the pot. The mouth feel of angel hair, however, even when not perfectly textured, makes it one of my favorites, and Dom's straightforward, traditional marinara sauce made the perfect match.

The clear winner among the pastas was the linguini with white clam sauce ($10). Although created from dry pasta, these impeccably cooked, al dente noodles came dressed with as good a white clam sauce as I have ever tasted. Made up of tender morsels of clams and shallots, garlic, and scallions sautéed in just a soupçon of extra-virgin olive oil, melded into intensely flavorful clam broth and finished with a dollop of rich creamy butter, the sauce coated the pasta in a marvelous treat to the taste buds.

My companions and I would have been well advised to conclude our meals, with one exception, after the pastas. The sirloin steak ($24) missed the mark by a mile: It was thin, dry and dense. Ordered medium rare, it arrived medium well, and despite my request that any dressing be served on the side, the steak came smothered in sauce. A fish special one evening, tilapia Dom's serves its food in an unpretentious, casual atmosphere.

($25), suffered from substandard, soft texture, and its thick, bland, white sauce did little to rescue it. In contrast, the veal Milanese, a traditional veal cutlet pounded thin, dredged in flavored bread crumbs with a whisper of Parmesan, and fast-fried to a crisp, golden-brown crust enclosing tender, delicate flesh, hit a home run. This Italian classic appeared nowhere on the menu, but Dom's accommodating kitchen rose to the occasion when my son, for whom it is a favorite, requested it, redeeming the post-pasta courses. Unfortunately the heavy, sticky risotto that accompanied all three meat and fish courses did not deserve to dwell under the same roof as Dom's superb tagliatelle and linguini.

Dessert selections returned to the high level of the pastas. A fresh-made cannoli ($3.75), its crisp shell stuffed with creamy, mellowly sweet ricotta seconds before it was served, constituted a masterful paradigm of this standard, almost clichéd Italian treat, and at such a tiny price. Crema caramela ($5.25) brought a cylinder of sweet, thick, luscious custard. Finally, spumoni ($4.25), often a banal, perfunctory pyramid of rock-hard ice cream, at Dom's turned out to be a delightful, creamy-textured, pistachio studded semifreddo.

Dom's offers a short but serviceable section of wines, mostly Italian. The house Chianti ($8 per glass) was fruity but with good acid, making it a particularly felicitous complement to the pastas. Cabernet Sauvignon by the glass ($6.50) boasted good texture that stood up well to the garlic-laden food. A bottle of 1998 Formentino Collio ($30), an Italian cabernet franc, a grape more suited to blending than flying solo, seemed tannic, austere and less approachable.

What I liked most about Dom's was its lack of pretension and its earnest dedication to making patrons comfortable and satisfied. Rather than having officious waiters wield pepper mills and cheese graters, the tables are set with a pepper mill and a small bowl of grated cheese. Soon after an order is placed, Capossela brings a basket of decent bread and a plate of Dom's signature garlic toast, accompanied by mellow, roasted-garlic puree, along with a splendid house salad of crunchy Romaine lettuce; garlicky, creamy dressing; and a few slices of celery, cucumbers and, on one occasion, sliced tomatoes. Recorded music included Sinatra (and had I listened carefully and waited long enough, probably Tony Bennett as well).

Dom's culinary approach can be described by the Italian word casalinga, roughly translated as home cooking, and the restaurant's ambience is homey and casual. While Dom's may not be for everybody—there may be people who feel that Capossela's urge to sit and consult on every menu choice is a bit much, though I'm not among them—the place has a peculiar charm that I found quite engaging. Whether for a quiet, unpretentious dinner alone, or for a gathering with colleagues at the end of a long day, you could do worse than to wander into this little eatery, where Dom's casa è la vostra casa. EVOO Empire Expands

ZA Man...Good-bye Gallia... Hathaway heads west

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Six years after opening EVOO in Somerville, chef/owner Peter McCarthy is celebrating his success by expanding his culinary reach to nearby Arlington. ZA, which will take over the former Full Moon space on Mass. Ave., will specialize in individual, 10-inch pan pizzas and salads, says McCarthy. "From straightforward, regular tomato-and-cheese to smoked salmon and cream cheese pizzas," says McCarthy. With town approval in hand for a beer and wine license, McCarthy says he expects to open his new restaurant in early July. ZA, of course, is an abbreviated nickname for "pizza," in much the same way EVOO is an acronym for "extra virgin olive oil." As far as we know, McCarthy has no plans to change his name to "PM."

EVOO's Peter McCarthy is preparing to open ZA in the former Full Moon space in Arlington.

SECOND COURSE

Neighborhood, chef-owned restaurants in general report that business is good these days, after a rough couple of years. "Every year gets better," says Peter McCarthy. "We've got lots of regulars." In the South End, Laura Brennan of Caffè Umbra says business is consistently improving, and she stays focused on the food: "As soon as I hang up, I'm making gazpacho. Shrimp and scallop gazpacho with lobster cream." Nearby, the Union Square Grill is flourishing. On the other hand, Gallia recently closed abruptly. Maybe it got off on the wrong foot with an initially too-expensive menu. Maybe it had bad feng shui. Whatever, it never gained the buzz and the clientele it needed to stay afloat after almost two years.

In Brookline, at the Washington Square Tavern, chef/co-owner Paul Hathaway says he "can't complain at all" about the pace of business at the neighborhood-oriented eatery. "We never really slowed down that much," he says. Far from slowing down himself, Hathaway is preparing for an imminent move to Amherst, where he plans to open a new restaurant with his wife within the year. Sam Kochan, most recently at Grill 23 and formerly of the Franklin Café and Harvest, takes over as WST chef on June 1.

The picture is more complex at the three restaurants owned by the Elephant Walk group. "Three restaurants, three realities," says co-owner Bob Perry. Overall, he's pleased to note a "nice upward trend" after several slow years and a potentially devastating fire in the Boston Elephant Walk. (The other Elephant Walk is in Cambridge.) Carambola in Waltham remains a local favorite, and the Elephant Walk's cooking classes—three or four every month—are almost always booked to capacity. Most of the classes take place at the Boston restaurant, although a special grilling class will be held this summer at the Jamaica Plain home of founding chef Longteine "Nyep" de Monteiro.

At Pigalle, in the Theater District, co-owner Kerri Foley says the pace of business at her destination restaurant ebbs and flows according to the schedules and successes of the nearby shows. "Things are good right now," she says, in contrast to school vacation week in April, when most theatrical venues were dark. And it's "definitely not terrible," she adds, compared with the days at the start of the war in Iraq and "the whole French thing." iB

WINE

Qué Syrah? Shiraz?

BY SANDY BLOCK M.W.

The grape sometimes known as shiraz and sometimes as syrah has a double nature. Shiraz is Mark Twain: deceptively colloquial, easy-going, down-home and apt to spice things up a bit. It always speaks in the vernacular and often makes us smile. Syrah is Samuel Clemens: respectable, serious, a bit reserved and eminently comfortable at the most formal table. A solid, dependable citizen. Which one do you think most Americans like best?

That's right, shiraz is the people's choice. It's got a winning personality that's hard for even the most snobbish among us not to love. This is Australia's identity grape, and we all know what Australian wine has been doing in the U.S. in the last five years: growing at a parabolic rate. The land down under now stands at number two on the hit parade of countries we import from, even though it's experienced some difficulty of late (stemming mostly from a currency exchange rate that is making a shambles of all the major companies' profit-and-loss sheets). If you were to extrapolate out into the not too distant future, it's likely that Australian wine will storm into the top import spot. Shiraz, which has become our single most popular category of imported varietal red wine, is leading this charge.

Most of the Aussie shiraz we consume in such vast quantities is moderately priced, under $10 at the store. This is the red wine that we'd all been waiting for. It's got abundant quantities of fruit flavor, it's soft on the palate, without any trace of a nasty bite, and after you swallow it, if you've chosen wisely, the mildly spicy accents hang in there for a good long time. So it hits all the buttons: dark color, easy to drink, charming, blends well with food. It's what comes after merlot. For those of you who would feel guilty about ordering the aforementioned, for fear others might think you pedestrian, shiraz still has a ring of the exotic to it. "Glass of shiraz, please." How sophisticated. For about another year at least.

But of course, the story is always more complicated than it appears on the surface, because shiraz is capable of great things, beyond just slaking one's thirst and lending an air of continental rakishness to one's quaffing preferences—not that those are inconsiderable attributes in and of themselves. As with all things wine, it comes down to the climate—and to a lesser extent, the soil. If the vine grows in a region that's just a bit on the cool side, you get flavors that tend more toward the peppery, leafy, spicy end of the spectrum, with sharply delineated fruit accents (as in raspberry) that can sometimes border on the acidic. If you like these qualities, go for shiraz from such places as the Yarra Valley in Victoria, or McLaren Vale or Limestone Coast in South Australia. Richer, sweeter, earthier flavors, tending more towards ripe black cherries, with hints of chocolate and anise, are natural in wines from warmer regions, such as the Barossa and Lower Hunter valleys.

What's the best shiraz? There are some that are very pricey indeed, that are highly "extracted," in the jargon of the wine community. Translated into English, that means they're opaque, strong tasting and will coat your mouth with thick masses of fruit and tannin. As an added bonus, many also reek from vanilla. Not my style, although I appear to be in the minority, as some of the wine world's reigning gurus can't get enough of these big, hundred-dollar sexpots. Better wine stores will have them under the counter, if at all, because putting the bottles out might cause a stampede among the small coterie of cultists who follow these wines. Maybe they're for you.

My favorite way to enjoy shiraz is to drink it with dinner. Or, I imagine, with lunch, although far be it from me to encourage anyone to break the local taboo against enjoying an alcoholic beverage prior to nightfall. Preferred fare: chili, cold meat salads, ribs, Mexican bean and meat dishes, casseroles, Peking duck and slow-cooked meats. You don't have to stand on ceremony with shiraz, it's versatile as all get-out, and the wine can definitely stand up to some heat in whatever you're cooking.

Shiraz also happens to be a good blender. It's particularly gregarious with cabernet sauvignon, which usually has a darker, firmer tone. Look for wines labeled shiraz cabernet (the wineries will often give you the exact percentages) if you want something a bit fruitier, with less tannin, and those labeled cabernet shiraz if you want just the reverse.

And, of course, don't forget about syrah. For my money some of the most exciting wine coming out of California and Washington nowadays is made from this unsung grape. Whereas we're flocking in droves to shiraz, the poor syrah is often a wallflower. Perhaps it needs to change its name, an eminently American thing to do, in order to achieve greater popularity. Or, more likely, if the syrah producers stick to their guns they'll soon find that the tide of fashion has swung their way as the very popularity of shiraz begins to work against it. IB

FRI. & SAT./JUNE 4 & 5

CityScope: Brewin' Season

An event that draws more than 7,000 people to drink beer and rock out to up-and-coming bands over the course of two days, dubbed Brewstock? Sounds like a throwback to the simple days of college (or at least the fun part). Of course, there are a few minor differences between undergrad keg parties and Harpoon Brewery's 11th annual Brewstock Festival, the most obvious being the quality of beer. This year, Harpoon's cups runneth over with its Summer Beer, IPA and UFO Hefeweizen. The festivities begin Friday night, when partygoers can kick back under the Harpoon tents and listen to live rock and tranquil reggae music by Black 47, Joel Cage, Hot Like Fire, the Gentlemen and Boston Horns while feasting on barbecue from Jake's Dixie Roadhouse. A word to those who are planning to run the Harpoon 5-Miler Road Race to benefit the Angel Fund and ALS Research on Saturday morning: Go easy on the booze—there's plenty of time to catch up at the postrace party. Fri., 5:30-11 pm (doors close at 9:30 pm); Sat., 3:30-9 pm (doors close at 7:30 pm). $10, 21+. 306 Northern Ave., Boston (888-427-7666). www.harpoonbrewery.com.

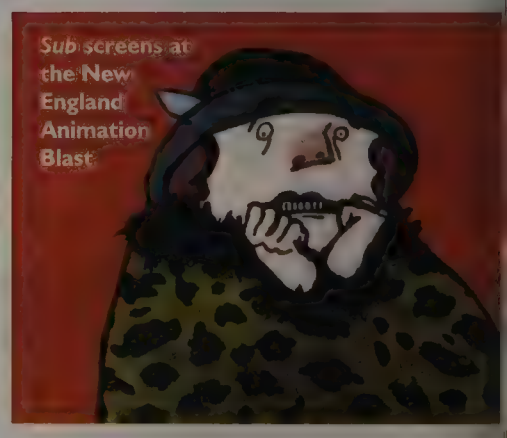
CityScope: Hot Wheels

Tailgating is not typically an upscale affair. But when you trade Jeeps for Bentleys, and burgers and wieners for gourmet grub, it becomes just that. This year, Shelter Inc. imports 20 vintage and contemporary Bentleys and Rolls Royces, courtesy of the Yankee Region Rolls Royce Owners Club, to the World Trade Center for Heading Home, its annual benefit to fight homelessness. Each car is matched with a delicious spread prepared by chefs from Spire, Icarus, the East Coast Grill, Chez Henri, Blu, L and others. Those planning to attend should note that while they may admire the cars from afar, they will not be permitted to sit or dine in the cars, and food will not be served out of the trunks (the folks at Yankee Region aren't that dumb). On par with the luxurious cars are the auction items: a walk-on part in an upcoming Farrelly brothers' movie; a meal for 14 prepared by Chris Schlesinger of the East Coast Grill; a six-night South African photo safari; and a Red Sox package that includes two front-row dugout box seats, preferred parking next to Fenway and dinner at the Hall of Fame Club. And we thought adding marinated steak tips to our tailgate menu was high-class.

6 pm. $250. World Trade Center, 200 Seaport Blvd., Boston (617-864-8140). www.shelterinc.org.

Zhang Yimou's Hero screens at the Coolidge Corner Theatre May 27.

WED. & THU./MAY 26 & 27



Movies: Film Hero

Brookline is a far cry from Hollywood, but among the million-plus-dollar mansions, upscale shops and tree-lined drives of the upper-crusty, über-conservative neighborhood sits one of the best arthouse movie meccas in the country. For the past 71 years the Coolidge Corner Theatre has managed to provide progressive programming and also book events that attract A-listers (like Lilli Thompson and John Waters) who would normally be considered too big for the cinema's small-time indie britches. Next up on its list of celebrity coups is a ceremony honoring Chinese cinema bigwig Zhang Yimou, who receives the first-ever Coolidge Award, which honors filmmakers who "consistently create challenging and original work." Yimou's directing credits include 1987's Red Sorghum and 1991's Raise the Red Lantern, which exemplified a departure from the traditional style of romantic Chinese filmmaking and were consequently banned from his homeland. On May 26, the director makes a rare personal appearance to accept his award. Filmmaker Allan Miller (The Turandot Project) and New York Film Festival program director Richard Pena also attend to toast the honoree and introduce excerpts from his films. Additionally, choreographer Ling Chu performs a dance sequence and renowned martial arts expert Bow Sim Mark gives an exhibition. The following evening, the Coolidge holds a sneak preview of Yimou's yet-to-be-released film Hero. The historical action epic stars Jet Li, Zhang Ziyi, Tony Leung and Maggie Cheung and reportedly features beautiful, Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon–style choreography. Wed., 8 pm. $20-$25. Thu., 7:30 pm. 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). www.coolidge.org.

SAT./JUNE 5

CityScope: The Good Life

If you grew up in the suburbs, your summer probably saw their share of block/backyard parties. Cooking out, Wiffle ball and horseshoes, and, depending on the organization level of neighborhood parents, possibly three-legged and potato sack races were all part of the routine. However, whe due to lack of backyards or traffic-free bloc such old-school fun is decidedly absent in t city. Boston-based, feel-good apparel comp Life Is Good is circumventing the urban congestion and bringing the backyard ballyhoo to the Esplanade for their 2004 Backyard Festival. The day-long IMPROPER-sponsored event benefits Project Joy, a loca program that provides therapy for underprivileged children, and features summertime festivities with all the fixings. Croquet tournaments, burger-flipping and watermelon seed-spitting contests, Nerf to face-painting, as well as the classic three-legged races are on the bill. A cookout me of hot dogs, hamburgers, veggie burgers, C Cod chips and J.P. Licks are available à la carte, and Entrain and III Kings provide musical entertainment. 11 am-6 am. Lederr Field, Charles River Esplanade. (617-266-4160). www.lifeisgood.com.

FRI.–SUN./JUNE 4–6

Movies: Festival of Animatio

Our interest in animation is usually limited t Bugs Bunny cartoons and the occasional Ren Stimpy rerun. Yet there have been times whe we've been blown away by an animated mov (like last year's kooky The Triplets of Belleville) Now, the Brattle and the Coolidge, the city's two main purveyors of all things creatively cinematic, are teaming up for the first annual New England Animation Blast—a full weekend's worth of vintage oddities, new shorts and features and animated shorts. The weekend's centerpiece is a competition in which 15 selected new films will screen, with the audience choosing the winner. The onslaught of animation includes traditional c animation, computer animation, experiment and stop-motion, and programs range from family-friendly fare during the day to more gross-out midnight movies. There's even a show entitled "Real Cartoons," which featur "animated documentaries." In addition to th screenings, a panel discussion with Soup2Nu the Watertown-based animation studio behi the series Dr. Katz and Home Movies, takes place June 6, at 6 pm, at the Brattle. Check www.brattlefilm.org/neab for the full schedul Brattle Theatre, 40 Brattle St. (617-876-6837) Coolidge Corner Theatre, 290 Harvard St. (61 734-2500).

The Scooper Bowl

Forget tea—Boston's biggest party is all about ice cream. The 23rd annual Scooper Bowl Festival arrives just in time to wreak havoc on swimsuit-season physiques. After all, if you're going to blow your diet, you may as well go all out. And what better place to do so than the nation's largest all-you-can-eat ice cream fest? The event, which raises money for the Jimmy Fund at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, lasts three days (even if your stomach won't), and more than 30 flavors of ice cream—from frozen-treat enablers like Häagen Dazs, Edy's and Ben & Jerry's—will be on hand. But the fest is more than just a half-week binge session. Beyond the gustatory satisfaction (or rather, overload) visitors can enjoy contests, music, games and live radio broadcasts from the site. Remember, when you're eating ice cream for charity, everyone's a winner. Except maybe your waistline.

Boston's Great Dane

The funny thing about stand-up comedy is, well, that it's funny. And back in the mid to late '80s, Boston's comedy scene was the Will Ferrell in a country full of Bob Sagets. But while residents of Beantown were packed into comedy clubs laughing their stonewashed-clad asses off at the likes of Jay Leno, Denis Leary and Steve Sweeney, Arlington native Dane Cook was out there listening, studying and honing a craft in which he felt destined to succeed.

"Comedy was the first thing I can remember wanting to do," the 32-year-old Cook says. "So I used to sit and watch guys like Sweeney, Don Gavin and Kevin Knox, and I watched their delivery and saw how they handled crowds." A look at what's on Cook's plate as he prepares to headline the Comedy Connection (May 28-30) shows that whatever he absorbed during those nights in the audience has made Hollywood and the rest of the country take notice. There's his blossoming movie and TV career, which took off last year with roles in the Farrelly brothers' comedy Stuck on You and the action thriller Torque. Then there are his numerous television appearances on Leno, Letterman and Comedy Central's Crank Yankers, and did we mention his debut CD/DVD, Harmful if Swallowed, which has sold more than 100,000 copies since October?

But Cook's roots still lie in his explosive, high-energy stand-up comedy, which covers subjects from his first job working at a Burger King drive-thru to his fear of the oversized, pitcher-shaped Kool-Aid mascot. And despite his recent successes, stand-up and the city of Boston will always be Cook's home. "My act is what opened all the doors for me," he says. "It enabled me to build my fan base, get noticed in Hollywood, and it's the reason for everything that I'm getting a chance to do now. And after 15 years of stand-up it's going to feel unbelievable to get up and headline at the place where I started."

The Comedy Connection, 245 Quincy Market, Boston (617-248-9700). May 28, 8 and 10:15 pm, $35; May 29, 8 and 10:15 pm, 12 am, $35; May 30, 7 and 9:15 pm, $32.

Dynamic Duos

Twosomes take off in Jim Jarmusch's latest

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Deadpan or dull? Those are the either/or descriptions that usually apply to the movies of quintessential indie director Jim Jarmusch. Interestingly deadpan in the case of an understated comedy like Mystery Train or his more recent, more dramatic Ghost Dog: The Way of the Samurai; doggedly dull in the case of long, languid films like Night on Earth and Dead Man. His new Coffee and Cigarettes, a compilation of short films featuring characters indulging in its titular treats, is not only one of his most enjoyable movies, it's also one of the writer-director's best odes to minimalism.

Meg and Jack White puff away and sip Joe as a framed Lee Marvin watches

Jarmusch made the 11 shorts in Coffee and Cigarettes over the past 18 years, and the feature delivers them chronologically. Most pit two characters in amusing conversations in which dark undercurrents often slither around between the lines. The characters generally have the same name as the actors who play them and are, in varying degrees, based on those performers—many of whom have appeared in Jarmusch's previous movies.

You may have seen the absurd opener, "Strange to Meet You," which features a tête-à-tête between Steven Wright and pre-Oscar Roberto Benigni, on Saturday Night Live (the show commissioned it). It's a fun mix of Wright's ill logic and Benigni's slippery grasp of the English language. It's also a celebration of simple, two-character dialogue, as is the rest of the movie. Jarmusch repeatedly celebrates pairs of things that go well together here, whether it's his characters, coffee and smokes, black and white, twins, Abbott and Costello or, to reference one of the soundtrack's songs, crimson and clover.

"No Problem" does a good job of tapping a comic conundrum akin to Abbott and Costello's "Who's on First?" routine: Isaach de Bankole meets with old friend Alex Descas, whom he hasn't seen in a while. De Bankole is sure that worried-looking Descas must have asked him to meet to talk over a serious problem, but Descas keeps denying any problem. And de Bankole keeps asking if he has one…

The dark undercurrent running beneath "Somewhere in California" and "Cousins?" isn't doom—it's competition. The former is a playful meeting between musical nonconformists Iggy Pop and Tom Waits, in which the two subtly try to outoutlaw each other (Waits' hilariously offers that Iggy might be a "Taco Bell sort of guy"). The latter features English actors Alfred Molina (Dudley Do-Right) and Steve Coogan (24 Hour Party People), who meet in Los Angeles (this tea-drinking encounter is the only entry free of coffee). In the short's context, Molina is the steadily working role player and Coogan the up-and-coming star, and their career prospects determine each's willingness to become friends with the other. Coogan's polite disses of chummy Molina, who's done genealogical research showing the two expatriate Brits are cousins, are priceless.

Other memorable duos include Cate Blanchett, as both a pampered version of herself and her resentful cousin, in "Cousins," (not to be confused with "Cousins?") the short with the most upscale setting; Italian-American old-timers Joe Rigano and Vinny Vella in "Those Things'll Kill Ya," in which the first chides the second for being addicted to smokes, and the second ranks out the first for having a caffeine jones; and Meg White and Jack White in "Jack Shows Meg His Tesla Coil," which is a bit more self-explanatory than one hopes.

Sometimes, the duos are a unit of two intruded upon by a third person. That situation makes for two of the funniest shorts. In "Twins," bickering Joie Lee and Cinque Lee get their ears bent by waiter Steve Buscemi, who has cockamamie theories about twins, especially Elvis Presley and Jesse Garon Presley. In "Delirium," health-conscious GZA and RZA (from rap group the Wu-Tang Clan) deal with coffee-guzzling waiter Bill Murray (unlike Buscemi, who plays a waiter, Murray plays himself moonlighting as a waiter for reasons he won't reveal).

"Delirium" has self-referential nods to dialogue in the Wright/Benigni and Waits/Pop shorts, and it would have been the right place for Coffee and Cigarettes to conclude. But after bringing the movie around full-circle, Jarmusch follows "Delirium" with the less interesting "Champagne," which also is self-referential and subsequently anticlimactic. Despite this misstep (and one other underachiever, "Renee," which comes halfway in), Coffee and Cigarettes is still unpretentious fun. The movie unfolds in cool surroundings and with cool music, from the Pharaohs and the Stooges to Funkadelic. The world of Coffee and Cigarettes is a nice place to be and, unlike most movies, it celebrates stripped-down realism and individual self-expression, instead of negating them. IB

Aileen: Life and Death of a Serial Killer ★★★½
Documentary director Nick Broomfield revisi Florida multiple murderer Aileen Wuornos, decade after his Aileen Wuornos: The Selling of a Se ial Killer, which detailed how everyone in the sta (police, lawyers, politicians, etc.) seemed to by t ing to make a buck off her. Broomfield shows h his first film was used in Wuornos' appeal, as ev dence of how ill-prepared her first lawyer was. Ar in between interviews with an increasingly u hinged Wuornos, he and co-director Joan Church look into Wuornos' frightening Michigan chil hood. This sobering look at human mistreatmen heaped upon and later dished out by Wuorno blows away the docudrama Monster. (At Kenda Square through May 27; out on DVD June 1.)

The Battle of Algiers ★★★½
This 1965 look at the 1950s Algerian uprisi against French colonials is one of the great docudr mas. Now in rerelease, the movie's realism is st bracing, and its "real" violence still jarring and di turbing. The movie has only become more moral complex over time, as it asks us to sympathize wi revolutionaries who, essentially, perform terrori acts. The movie is also too intense and immediate preach, though. (At the Brattle, May 28-30.)

Breakin' All the Rules ★★½
It's not as high on laughs as it might be, but write director Daniel Taplitz's romantic comedy does good job of weaving its elaborate plot involvi coincidences, mistaken identities and a how-t break-up manual written by Jamie Foxx's pr tagonist. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburb

Good Bye Lenin! ★★½
An East German woman goes into a coma just b fore the Berlin Wall falls, and when she has to le a stress-free life after she comes to, her son goes great lengths to make sure she never learns that h Communist country doesn't exist anymore. Th great premise yields some amusing moments, b also some disappointing ones. Unlike in Bi Wilder's brilliant One, Two, Three (which cover similar territory after the wall went up), the come here never quite hits high gear because the st tempers the humor with shades of drama. But t characters' family drama never becomes as mem rable as the premise. (At Kendall Square.)

Heir to an Execution ★★★½
First-time moviemaker Ivy Meeropol's HBO-bou film is an involving blend of American history a personal documentary. Meeropol is the gran daughter of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the C War radicals who were made an example of and ecuted for spying in 1953. Meeropol always kn about her grandparents, yet was puzzled over h their families failed to support them after their rest or to adopt their two sons, including her d after their execution. So she tracks down friends her grandparents and tries to contact estrang family members to find out about the grandpare she never met. Like Strange Fruit—last year's do mentary about Abel Meeropol, the teacher/wri who adopted the Rosenbergs' boys—this is gr history that they don't teach in school. (At the M seum of Fine Arts, June 3 and 6.)

Kill Bill Vol. 2 ★★
It used to be fun when Quentin Tarantino put his pop-culture influences in a blender and s them back out. What happened? Tarantino m have been one of the first American directors spired by Hong Kong's 1980s action heyday, since his Reservoir Dogs, a hundred other mov have mined the same sources. And Pulp Fiction never as self-conscious as the second half of Bill (or its predecessor, released last fall). Tar tino doesn't so much blend influences here as si ply ape them one at a time: Sergio Leone close- and spaghetti western music in one of its chapt grainy film, Chinese dialogue and a king homage in the other. At least Vol. 2 has Mich Madsen, the only star here who seems genuin dangerous and doesn't come off like a mere ac playing bad-ass. (At Boston Common, Fenway suburbs.)

Martin & Orloff ★★★
This winning buddy comedy includes lots of fa iar alternative-comedy faces from the Upright C zens Brigade, Second City and parts elsewhere, cluding Amy Poehler, David Cross and co-wri Matt Walsh. Walsh plays a carefree shrink pulls a suicidal new patient (Ian Roberts) into whirlwind world. Although the comedy forced at first, the movie ultimately captures s of the absurd unpredictability of the original (P Falk-Alan Arkin) version of The In-Laws. (At Copley Place.)

Mean Girls ★★
With a comic tone pitched somewhere between Heathers and Clueless, writer and co-star Tina (Saturday Night Live) Fey's comedy comes off like a watered-down version of both—not as savage as the former nor as stylized as the latter. Perhaps the problem was shoehorning the story to appeal to the preteen audience of star Lindsay Lohan. She plays a 16-year-old who's been living in Africa with her zoologist parents and is now entering a conventional high school for the first time. She gets taken under the wing of the school's popular girls and soon becomes consumed by the vain, territorial teen princesses' wicked ways. While respectable (and respectful of its audience), Fey's anti-gossip, pro-sisterhood tale is long-winded and not all that funny. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Saved! ★★
You'll find no argument from me about this comedy's message, as it pokes fun at the repression and hypocrisy of religious fundamentalism. And the cast, playing students at American Eagle Christian High School, includes Jena Malone, Patrick Fugit and even Macauley Culkin and Mandy Moore doing some of their best work (love the end-credits duet of the Beach Boys' "God Only Knows" by Moore and co-producer Michael Stipe). But director and co-writer Brian Dannelly has made such a simplistic and smug movie that it's really only preaching to the converted, and you get the feeling he thinks his movie is much more outrageous than it really is. The film is only slightly less self-righteous than those it mocks. Check out the documentary Hell House, about the scare tactics of a Dallas Pentecostal haunted house, for the real thing. (Opening May 28)

Still, We Believe: The Boston Red Sox Movie ★★★
It's good to see the Red Sox get some attention—you hardly hear anything about those guys these days. Surprisingly, this documentary about the Sox' 2003 season manages not to be redundant, because it focuses on eight different fans, most of whom are pretty colorful. My favorites are Brockton realist Jermaine, inseparable East Boston diehards Erin and Jessamy and, last but not least, Watertown pessimist "Angry Bill." His mood swings (over the course of a game, an inning or even an at-bat) are priceless and are something with which every Sox fan can commiserate. There's a lot of pain going on, especially come Game Seven against the Yankees, but this is a pleasure to watch. (At Boston Common and suburbs.)

Super Size Me ★★★
See Morgan. See Morgan eat only at McDonald's for 30 days. See Morgan's weight balloon, his cholesterol shoot up and his liver start to break down. Director Morgan Spurlock, sort of a lighter (and lighter-touch) Michael Moore, serves up his McBinge very amusingly, in order to expose the poison of American fast food. He plays the role of guinea pig with such a commitment and sense of humor that the rather depressing message of Super Size Me goes down easier. Whether Spurlock intended it or not, the larger picture of this country that his movie paints is a frightening one of total decadence, self-indulgence and slavishness to profit and instant gratification, at the expense of common sense and humanity. (At Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Troy ★★½
Sword-and-sandals epics like this Trojan War movie are always a little cheesy, and this one is no different. The arch dialogue and "hey, look at these expensive sets!" feeling are to be expected, as are the CGI hordes of battlers. But not the fact that half the action with the star (Brad Pitt as warrior extraordinaire Achilles) is just plain goofy. Yet, Wolfgang Petersen's movie can impress, especially in the showdown between Achilles and Eric Bana's Hector. That crucial scene is well shot and imaginatively scored, and unlike most fight scenes these days, it's not confusing. Meanwhile, Brian Cox brings some Yosemite Sam rootin'-tootin' fire to Agamemnon—the Greek king who finds a convenient excuse to stage an invasion (doesn't that sound familiar?)—and Peter O'Toole adds class as Trojan king Priam. But listless German actress Diane Kruger as Helen, the face that launched a thousand ships? Not likely. (At Loews Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Van Helsing ★
Oh, the lack of humanity. Director Stephen Sommers, the hack behind the Mummy movies, gives us more special-effects-heavy emptiness. Only this one is more effects-heavy and more empty. With Hugh Jackman as the title character, merely the latest gimmicky spectacle-movie evil-fighter to come down the multiplex pike, and cohort Kate Beckinsale dolled up like a hooker at the Country Music Awards, this is a bloody drag. Sommers' main priority seems to be to take the human element out of moviemaking; he even turns Dr. Jekyll's pal Mr. Hyde into a Hulk-like CGI effect. His only talent is knowing the effects whizzes' phone numbers. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Brad Pitt plays the Greek warrior Achilles in Wolfgang Petersen's Troy.

With All Deliberate Speed ★★★½
Before Martin Luther King and Rosa Parks led the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott, and before the full-on civil rights movement that sprang from it, groups of discontented high school students in several states stood up against the inferior quality of education for black students. Their walkouts, petitions and lawsuits led to the landmark Brown vs. the Board of Education case, in which the Supreme Court ruled that "separate but equal" racial segregation was unconstitutional. This documentary is both an inspiring look at the grassroots discontent that led to national progress—with anecdotes from many of the crusaders behind it—and a cautionary tale about how the court's ruling still hasn't been fully implemented. (At Kendall Square.)

Young Adam ★★
Could someone please make an NC-17 movie that has something more remarkable about it than the fact that it's rated NC-17? In this drama set in 1950s Glasgow, Ewan McGregor plays a failed writer who thinks with his tally-whacker, an opportunistic seducer whose wandering heart leaves a trail of hurt and even death. Despite a gritty tone, an effective nonlinear time structure, yet another strong McGregor performance and a fine cast (also including Tilda Swinton, Emily Mortimer and Peter Mullan), this would-be indictment of masculine sexuality gets unintentionally comical, after yet another husband decides to leave his wife alone with McGregor's character for long stretches of time. It dulls the drama when sex-starved women literally drop into his lap, and credibility steadily oozes out of this, like air from a split balloon. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Grant-Lee Phillips grows Virginia Creeper from his personal mythology

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Grant-Lee Phillips first rose to prominence with his mid-'90s band Grant Lee Buffalo, wielding a malleable voice that earned him Best Male Vocalist honors in Rolling Stone and playing a 12-string acoustic guitar wired through a fuzzbox. On the wings of that band's haunting hits "Mockingbirds" and "Fuzzy," Phillips, like Jeff Buckley and Radiohead's Thom Yorke, made alternative-rock radio safe for the falsetto.

Grant-Lee Phillips' new CD stands up to, and even surpasses, his old band's oeuvre.

A decade later, Phillips has come full circle on his third solo CD, Virginia Creeper, which stands up to—and even surpasses—his Grant Lee Buffalo oeuvre with a melancholy charm and natural assuredness that finds his comfort zone.

"It's probably a case of allowing myself to gravitate toward the stuff that felt the best and bypassing my brain for a moment," says Phillips, who brings his new band to the Paradise June 10. "I let my fingers do the walking."

Creeping might be a better word, in line with the CD title, named after a persistent, slow-moving vine. "It describes this album, describes its flow, and describes my own pace and philosophy," he says. "That's the underlying theme of Virginia Creeper, sort of long, low, slow impressions."

Many of those impressions come from lyrics that, like his work in Grant Lee Buffalo, reflect Phillips' attraction to the mystery in Americana. Seasoned with banjo, mandolin, ukulele, dobro, accordion and violin, the album touches on folkloric characters and imagery in such songs as "Calamity Jane" ("They're whispering like locusts in the grain") and the Appalachia-styled "Josephine of the Swamps." Other songs mention Johnny Appleseed, carnival lights and, in a cover of Gram Parson's "Hickory Wind," Carolina pine trees.

"That's just allowing my own obsessions and personal quirks to come through," Phillips says. "These characters from American folklore are as real to me as anything else, and there's a million more of them. It's sort of like our own mythology, and some of that is personification, but in some cases, some of these people actually walked the planet."

One of those people was Phillips' Native American great-grandmother, the subject of the nostalgic piano waltz "Susanna Little." "She witnessed all sorts of injustices," he says. "In the end, there was some sense of justice, if you can call it that. Some natives were given useless plots of dry dirt, and it so happened there was oil underneath."

As for the predominance of female protagonists on Virginia Creeper, he says, "It runs the gamut from a song about my great-grandmother to 'Lily-A-Passion,' a flowery tribute to the goddess in all. Vines and flowers are a very romantic notion, and writing about female characters is as old as the hills. It goes back to the troubadours."

Phillips can relate to troubadours, and even plays one as a recurring character on the TV series Gilmore Girls, whose producers were fans of his. "We're still bound to open our guitar cases on the sidewalk," he says, "all the time knowing it may be too big a vessel for the endeavor."

Growing up in Stockton, Calif., Phillips indulged in other sidewalk exploits that could serve as fodder for his own mythology. At age 10, he took his penchant for card tricks to another level as a child magician at a local amusement park and joined a vaudeville/melodrama revival house.

"That's where I was able to try my hand at everything from juggling to comedy to becoming a self-taught stuntman," he says. "That's what kept me off the streets and on the dusty sidewalks of a fake ghost town in northern California, all through my teenage years. We would perform gunfights and cowboy stunt shows on Saturday and Sunday afternoons, and Friday and Saturday evenings would be consumed with vaudeville-melodrama shows, and I'd be performing with a magic act throughout the week. And I put a band together."

Despite a crack at film school, Phillips stuck with music, fueled by the allure of indie-label groups such as the Dream Syndicate. "I went with my gut," says Phillips, 40. "And overnight success came about nine years later."

Now, after about the same period of time, following his demo-styled solo debut, Ladies' Love Oracle, and the more eclectic Mobilize, Phillips deserves more widespread recognition with Virginia Creeper. On his current tour, his band features drummer Kevin Jarvis and singer Cindy Wasserman—from the album—along with upright bassist Dave Carpenter. He also expects to collaborate on some songs—and share the musicians—with opening act John Doe, the X singer/bassist who toured with Phillips and Kristin Hersh (formerly of Throwing Muses) as the Exile Follies.

And yes, fans can expect a few Grant Lee Buffalo tunes on that 12-string acoustic with fuzzbox. "I get a kick out of playing those old songs," Phillips says, "as much as anyone enjoys hearing them." IB plays at the Paradise Rock Club, with John Doe, June 10.

Grant-Lee Phillips

The Institute of Contemporary Art highlights emerging artists as it readies for a move to shiny new digs

Erwachsen werden, Fabio (Growing Up, Fabio) is a series of 16 drawings by Kai Althoff

As the Institute of Contemporary Art preps for what's widely considered the most momentous event in its history—the construction of its new four-story building on the Fan Pier (scheduled for completion in spring 2006)—curators are launching an exhibition series designed to reflect the transition from one building to the next. Titled Momentum, the series spotlights emerging artists.

New York–based artist Carol Bove open the series on May 26th with installations inspired by the changing social climate of the 1960s and '70s and the 1970s-era architecture of the ICA's current building. "It was a dynamic time when there was great possibility for change," says Emily Moore, of the institute's curatorial staff. Bove creates unique sculptures using vintage shelving units and mostly first-edition books from the '60s and '70s. Also on display will be her drawings based on Playboy magazine images from the same era.

The ICA opens another exhibition on May 26th (though it is not part of the Momentum series), displaying the work of German artist Kai Althoff in Kai Kein Respekt (Kai No Respect). Like Bove, Althoff looks to the past to reflect on the present. He uses photographs, paintings, installations, text, video and music to create narratives often rich with Germanic folklore. This is Althoff's first solo museum exhibition in the United States, and he's collaborating with the ICA to completely transform the exhibition space—incorporating the walls, floors and ceiling into a specific environment.

Strawberries Need Rain, by Carol Bove

The ICA plans to continue Momentum indefinitely, pairing exhibitions by lesser-known artists, like Bove, with shows featuring more established artists, like Althoff. "The series is conceived as a project that will take us into our new building, where we'll be able to present underknown artists and give them a significant voice," says ICA spokesperson Melissa Kuronen. "A Momentum exhibition will complement every major show we do."

RECENT CORRESPONDENCE FOLLOWS.

Dear Family of Head Cases

Let's see—upon hearing that someone had made a racist remark to me, your 31-year-old daughter promptly had a 20-minute screaming fit at me, saying the way I walked "put people on the defensive" and that is why they say racist things. That I "walked with attitude" and she didn't know if it's "because you're a minority or from New Jersey." Then she screeched "I'm going home!" and stormed out. At which point her 33-year-old sister told me you had seen a Chris Rock special last night and "that was the history behind that."

Wow—my walk is so powerful it controls what people say! Why can't I use this all-powerful walk of mine to get a raise and a better parking space? Shall I use this power for good or evil? Whatever! Even if I was the same race and gender as Chris Rock, blaming TV for your sister's stupidity is still so lame.

So let's use your "logic" on you: Is the reason you are all so lame because a) you're white, b) from Massachusetts or c) because you roll around in your head problems like pigs in their own filth? Since you are all blithering idiots from a defective gene pool, I'll answer it for you: c. I didn't let your nasty, racist bullsh*t prevent me from meeting actual cool Massachusetts people of all races, religions and walks of life, as much as you wanted that to happen. Meanwhile, you sit at home in your father's house, single, unemployed and overweight, destined to never move out and being resentful because within two weeks of moving here, I had a great interesting job, my own affordable apartment and a great boyfriend.

You're all just trash because none of the girls in your extended family can get laid—witness your cousin, "Spinster Schoolmarm," who is pushing 30 and has never been on a date, or your other cousin who just can't handle her Mommy's drinky-drinky problem so she does drugs. Before you open your mouths to say anything to me again, fix all your many problems. Then we'll talk.

—Me

Orange Line, Inbound, May 6, 8:40 am

To the obnoxious guy who was sitting on the train playing loud rap music from a portable stereo (with the speakers facing outward, no less): Shame on you! And, most of all, shame on your mother for raising such a piece of crap, classless, useless son.

—A pissed off T patron

Dear Jacques Chez le Gap

After much coaxing from friends, I thought I should respond to your very very charming and humorous letter. It was truly a fluke that your note caught my eye. I was perusing the IB while in the subway, almost slipped off my seat and thought, wait a minute I remember this! But I really thought your letter was wonderful and I am so glad we had that brief encounter. I hope your niece liked her birthday gift.

Explorer's Club Gal (Mea Culpa!)

In the March 31 edition of the IMPROPER, you responded to my Impersonal. I was the Explorer's Club gal who was looking for a date to attend the Club's Centennial Bash at the Waldorf in NYC, where we were presenting Sir Edmund Hillary with a Lifetime Achievement Award for Exploration. I admit, I chose someone else—a very nice and charming Boston lawyer—but alas, in the end, there was no chemistry.

Out of courtesy, gratitude and interest, I had intended to respond to all who had replied. So, imagine my horror, when I discovered that all my responses to my ad were missing. I strongly suspect that this could be due to the fact that after the Bash I went to Europe for work for six weeks. There I encountered several computer snafus and allowed computer store personnel to "fix" my computer. Since there is another extraordinary Explorer's Club event in NYC on the horizon for which I need a date, let's try this again!

Me: bright and cheerful, attractive 38-year-old woman, well-traveled, lived abroad, multilingual and a member of the Club. You: Single, 38-45, charming, handsome, adventuresome, familiar with the Explorer's Club and have a zest for life! Please send your photo and a bio. Thank you for responding and I look forward to meeting you! This time, I promise to keep a backup. Mea culpa!

To the Boy in the Next Seat

We sat next to each other at the midnight showing of Troy May 14. Since we both arrived shortly before the movie started, we were stuck in the front of the movie theater. You were the tall guy with dark hair and glasses. I was the redhead in the green sweater. We laughed together over the cheesy delivery of lines in several scenes and I compared the music near the end to Titanic's sappy score. I left the theater debating whether or not I should ask for your number or slip you mine, but in the end I was entirely too shy. If you felt the same...

—devilorangelguess@yahoo.com

Who Are You?

Strikingly attractive man: tall, wavy brown hair, green shirt, outdoorsy-looking. I stood in front of you in line at the River Street B&C Café at about 1:30 pm May 14 and went to a table to sit with a woman friend; you talked with two shorter men (with shorter hair) over lunch. I'm 5'7" and pretty with light brown wavy hair and a friendly smile. I was wearing a black fleece shirt. If I had what it took at the time, I would have said something to start a conversation, but that's why God invented these ads. If this sounds familiar and you'd like to continue the conversation, e-mail me.

5:30 pm at the Central Square T Station

You: handsome, curly hair, short-sleeved black button-down shirt, tight jeans and stunning green eyes. Me: a petite Asian woman, captivated for a moment in rush hour. You remind me so much of Frodo Baggins that I'm on a quest to find you. Interested in starting our own fellowship? E-mail me.

Blue Line Guy

I know your name (I overheard you introducing yourself to someone else), but you don't know mine. I'm the cute brunette with the glasses. We used to see each other on the Blue Line at Government Center around 5 pm every day. You were working and I was on my way home. We smiled and said hi often. We even talked for a bit once. Then, just as suddenly as the first time I noticed you, you were gone. I had been hoping to get to know you better before you left, transferred, switched shifts... I'd love to share a drink with you sometime (and my name), so e-mail me. Put your name as the subject line so I know it's you.

K

To the best friend I've ever had. To the most fun I've ever had. Thank you for being my family these last three years. Thank you for helping me find my true self. Thank you for your strength and support. You're such a wonderful person, and you have a beautiful soul. I've learned so much from you. To all the great memories, and to the new ones we'll make. I'll miss you so very much. Just remember, this isn't goodbye, this is see you soon. I love you!

MAY 26 – JUNE 8, 2004

BY ROCKIE GARDINE

GEMINI MAY 21–JUNE 20

You could hitch a ride on the Taurus forecast since your Mercury ruler is calling the Bulls' shots. Besides, what Gemini doesn't have something relevant to say? Or you can concentrate exclusively on feeling great and looking fabulous while Venus is retrograde in your sign. Another option is to start the birthday celebrations early and keep them coming throughout the festive Memorial Day weekend. Congratulations, there's money waiting to be spent on travel arrangements, state-of-the-art camping equipment and, last but not least, the house.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Sympathetic Crabs are usually willing to help each other out, but this week, those born around Independence Day, like George W. Bush, may have to be not only rescued, but resuscitated, as well. While aggressive, go-it-alone Mars in Cancer collides with restrictive, play-by-the-rules Saturn, all hell can break loose. Even if you're the chief honcho of your domain, try to avoid inflicting further damage on those around you. Also be careful when shaving, cooking or confronting another authority figure, one who may have bigger balls.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

The outdoor-party season could turn into a memorable joke as one occasion after another fails to live up to inflated expectations. Hopefully, you have nothing major, like a wedding or graduation ceremony, on your calendar. It seems that spontaneous events have a better chance of not falling flat or, even worse, falling through. Try to hang loose and be more flexible so that you can get around the frustrating circumstances scheduled to pop up over the next two weeks. And keep lots of mad money on hand, just in case.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

This week, even shy, retiring Virgins are able to talk their way in and out of multilayered conversations with a varied cast of characters. Don't cross off any potential adviser, investor or customer before you've fully explained what is on your mind. Right now, people can be more amenable, more impressionable than you have any right to expect, especially family members you may have offended in a previous life. Keep an eye out for a chance to score the reputation-making assignment, the big bucks, while lucky Jupiter in your sign is lit up.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

A make-it-or-break-it situation can force your hand this week. Either you'll face the test that self-directed Mars presents and do something new and fairly risky, or you'll let a Saturnian sense of duty keep you rooted to the spot you're currently in. Family opinion may matter more than usual as both the conservative and the adventurous factions try to influence your decision. But what'll suit them might not be in your best interests, so take as much time as you can deliberating before you decide what to do. You can always change your mind.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Your very vocal spouse or business partner may need to hear everyone and his brother's opinion before committing to a course of action that might not include you, just some of the resources you share. Because your Mars co-ruler is under heavy-duty Saturnian restrictions this week, it's doubtful that you'll be willing to assume additional responsibility or liability. What now looks to be a lose-lose proposition will lighten up eventually, but until Mars moves far enough away from fretful, fearful Saturn in June, money will be a source of contention.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Ye olde entrepreneurial spirit can kick in again when courageous Mars and your growth-oriented Jupiter ruler form a mutually beneficial financial arrangement. Isn't there an Aries, Scorpio or Cancer native you want to work with? Someone fairly stable who could use your positive attitude and considerable intelligence? If your product or project is recreational, educational or entertaining, it'll be relatively easy to promote. Especially while Mercury, ruler sales and spiels, is so eager to reward prosperous Jupiter i your career midheaven.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Talk may be cheap, but right now it's the most effective and cost-efficient way to resolve the difficulties you encounter when overly aggressive Mars conjuncts your Saturn ruler. Although the incident that ensues can hurt your partner or your nearest, dearest Moon Child, be grateful that this much anger erupts only once every two years. On the other hand, that's a lot of raw passion that you could try to direct elsewhere, say, the boudoir. Then there's always the stonewalling option, a practice you've been known to excel

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

It gets wild. Every couple of months, mainly when the sun challenges your Uranus ruler, Aquarians have to blow thei cover. So much for cool and collected, reasonable and rational, friendly and fair. You have permission from the cosmos to be as ornery, unpredictable and idiosyncratic a you want, especially after enduring the frustration and fu that the biannual Mars-Saturn conjunction piles on you. However, you'll be glad to know that you can pretty much buy your way out of whatever situation you and your love get yourselves into. Expensive, but not prohibitive.

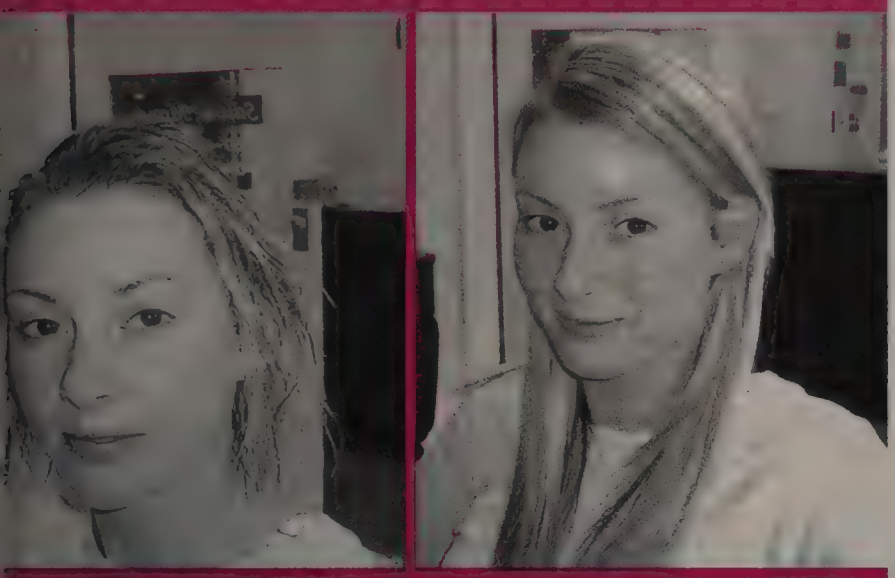
PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Money talks. Mercury in your house of finances is very busy this week, so arrange to have those conversations with as many people as you can. There's so little resistance right n that maybe something tangible, instead of the usual ephemeral bullshit, will take shape. However, understand t erratic Uranus in your sign is being tested by the sun, so there's a chance that you'll change horses midstream or co up with insurmountable conditions based on a "feeling." D you follow the money trail or trust your gut reaction?

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19



Is it yes or is it no? Do you stay or do you go? When your adventurous Mars ruler runs into restrictive Saturn this week, any progress or plans you've made could come to a abrupt halt. But Mercury is more than willing to facilitat discussions that'll get you past the roadblock. If you deci to talk it over, a compromise can be reached a lot sooner than you think. The unexpected intervention of friends a their financial assistance can also help settle a frustratin family matter and lessen your fear of imminent disaster.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Yakkety-yak. You may find yourself in a very talkative m mainly because clever Mercury in your sign contacts practically every other planet this week. Start with the innovative idea you and a farsighted friend come up with bring it to an experienced adviser, run it past the traditio money people and only then, let yourself get carried awa imagining the enormous amount of good it'll do. For you career! What else? For humanity! But remember that because your Venus ruler is retrograde, real progress cou be very slow.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the ICA, top: David Drubner, Rachael Goldfarb and Gideon Lester. Middle row: Cynthia Weiner, Peter Wasserman and Phyllis Mack; Karen and John Rotenberg. Bottom row: Mario Russo and Maggie Gold-Seelig; Trevania and John Henderson; Tia Scalcione and Chris McCarthy

ALWAYS READ THE INVITATION...

Despite the party's construction theme—"Caution" tape everywhere, waiters in hard hats, gravel, and Tonka truck centerpieces—the one sign that was unnecessary at the Institute of Contemporary Art's spring fund-raiser was "No Parking on the Dance Floor."

Held at the Cyclorama, the Sapphire Necklace Gala began with a cocktail hour that got everyone sufficiently lubricated, and the booty-shaking began even before the first course was served, with guests reluctant to leave the dance floor for dinner.

Duly noted among the crowd: such august personages as Fidelity honcha Abigail Johnson; her brother, Edward; his stunning wife, Allison; professional raffle prize winners Shelly and Ofer Nemirovsky; American Repertory Theatre scamp Gideon Lester; hair deity Mario Russo; the beyond-suave Juan Enriquez and his enchanting other half, Mary Schneider Enriquez; contemporary-art collector Sheryl Marshall; one-woman Mardi Gras Maura Connolly; the impossibly glamorous Jennifer Winn; dashing Bulgarian intellectual Kyril Alexandrov; prominent Provincetown couple Chris McCarthy and Tia Scalcione; bright young things Alex and Lisa Pierpont; short-story writer and Park Avenue princess Cynthia Weiner; and the inexhaustible Rachael and Andy Goldfarb, to name only a few.

Dinner was delicious, the live auction raised oodles of money for the ICA, and the band kept everyone dancing until the cows were way past their curfew.

Overheard at the bar: "When someone asks me what I do, I usually say, 'I'm a piano player in a whorehouse.'"

However, the evening's funniest moment was purely unintentional: One well-known couple arrived noticeably late and noticeably underdressed, sat down with friends and ate dessert, and then sheepishly snuck out after realizing the party they were supposed to be at was around the corner.

POPS ROCKS...

Opening Night at Pops never fails to delight, especially since it means that the lilacs are in bloom and the threat of a major snowstorm is past, so the person sitting next to you in Symphony Hall is less likely to smell like wet wool.

This year was no exception, and the celebration began with a cocktail reception and seated dinner for major benefactors at the Copley Plaza.

Puckish conductor Keith Lockhart (marking his 10th year as maestro) put in a brief appearance before rushing off to get ready, while a less harried crowd sipped and chatted and tied on the feedbag. Among them: PR giant Larry Weber and his lovely wife, Dawn; board chair Peter Brooke; mega Symphony supporters Chet and Farla Krentzman; globe-trotting socialites Lee and Cokie Perry; blonde bombshell Julie Hatfield; the always-colorful Doris Yaffe, and others of an equally glossy nature.

Meanwhile, back at Symphony Hall, other first-nighters sipped champagne and ate boxed suppers while exchanging pleasantries about where they plan to spend the summer. Present and accounted for: broadcasting eminences Frank Avruch, John Henning and Jack Williams; the startlingly sexy Susan Callendar; uber-philanthropists John and Diddy Culli-nane; Back Bay socialites Bert and Ro alie Cohen, and others too numerous mention.

The concert, which featured an appea ance by singer Art Garfunkel, as well as Russian violin prodigy named Euger Ugorski, was the expected confectio and—as always—the balloon drop duri the finale turned the audience of otherwi sedate adults into a bunch of boistero children. That, probably more than an thing else, is the surest sign that spring h arrived in Boston. iB

At Opening Night at Pops, from top: Bert and Rosalie Cohen; Bette and Frank Avruch; Chet Krentzman and Keith Lockhart; Doris Yaffe and Julie Hatfield; Irwin and Barbara Brilliant

The BEST TASTING LIGHT BEER in the World.

We got the medal.

You get the reward.

It's great to win and even better when you can drink the prize. In 2003, the judges from the World Beer Championships conducted a special taste test of the leading domestic and imported light beers. In 10 years of judging, Sam Adams Light® is the only light beer to be awarded a gold medal. The World Beer Championships, founded in 1994, is an independent body whose mission is to produce fair and impartial judging and reviews of beer for consumers. The World Beer Championships, conducted by the Beverage Testing Institute, have tested beer from over 50 countries.

EATING WELL

For the cover of this Summer Dining issue, we had a bunch of concepts featuring Michael Schlow, and being a good sport he cheerfully submitted to all of them. He juggled vegetables, waded in a kiddie pool with a fishing pole, and let us wrap him in a giant fishing net, among other undignified poses. We had a feeling he'd be game—after all, this is the James Beard award winner who last year welcomed guests to the opening of his most recent venture, Great Bay, wearing a yellow fisherman's slicker and hat and appeared at another event dressed as Moses.

It was Schlow's sense of fun we were trying to convey, but in the end the simple image of smiling chef with pan seemed to capture him best. Schlow's down-to-earth personality comes through in his interview with Jonathan Soroff (on page 16). To appreciate his love for great food, head to one of his three restaurants (the other two are Radius and Via Matta).

This issue offers plenty of ideas for enjoying food this summer—from a guide to the city's brunches to a look at the surprising frozen treats local chefs are adding to their menus as the weather heats up. Are your taste buds ready?

I JUST RETURNED FROM A WEEKEND IN SOUTH BEACH, AND THE ESTIMATE OF SPENDING $500 PER DAY IS RIGHT ON.

MIAMI VICES

I was highly amused by Ezra's Miami column ("Ciao, Baby," May 26), having just returned from a weekend in South Beach myself. His estimate of spending $500 per day is right on! I ordered a couple of bottles of water while lounging poolside at the Loews. The waitress brought it over all nice and cold in an ice bucket...and handed me a bill for $20! You think I'd learn from that? No, I needed more. Two days later, I ordered two frozen mudslides for a measly $28! I have to admit they hit the spot though. And talk about door drama. Luckily I was with three other girls all weekend, so it didn't prove to be a problem...except the one night we tried to get in with a guy in tow. Forget it: They wouldn't let him in!

And that didn't even compare to the door drama at Bed. Apparently they're open only for dinner reservations until 11:30 (on a Monday night!). Naturally, when we got inside it was empty and there was nowhere to sit except the beds—which we weren't allowed to sit on without a dinner reservation!

Good grief! But I have to admit that these little bumps were all very funny to me. I had a blast in SoBe and can't wait to go back!

I read Ezra's story on Miami in the last IMPROPER and thought it was great. Too funny! I just got back from a bachelor party in Miami, and the only place we could consistently get into was the Clevelander! Thanks, and keep up the good work.

SUPER!

At first when I saw the picture of the Supermercado Brasileiro (Mopsy, April 28), I was excited that you guys took the time to go into one of my favorite neighborhood joints. Soon after, I was horrified to see that you referred to the coxinha as "a kind of lasagna." Dear friends: The coxinha is a teardrop-shaped, fried finger-food snack with a meaty filling, or about as far as you can get from lasagna. Maybe you are mistaking the "lasagna" for something at the adjacent Papa John's.

While you're at it, quit the essentializing of Brazilian culture by using the stale image of "thongs" and your voyeuristic description of "smoochy sexiness." I won't even get into the silliness of describing palm hearts as "aristocratically silky."

HOUSE PARTY

The rejuvenation of West Broadway in South Boston continues with the 6 House, a new bar located next to the new Teriyaki House restaurant and across the street from new luxury condos. Are you sensing a trend here? "Southie's changing," says 6 House general manager Jamie Walsh. "A lot of friends I grew up with in Southie and Dorchester come here, but we also get a lot of the new South Boston customers too. Southie reminds me of how certain neighborhoods have evolved in Manhattan."

The 6 House (named after the old Sixth Precinct police station on D Street) aims to bring in that broad clientele with the obligatory plasma screens (four of them), a long bar seating 20-plus, and a menu that includes yuppie munchies like fried calamari ($7) and a chicken masala sandwich ($7) as well as traditional staples like a gigantic, 10-ounce burger ($7) and a steak tip sandwich ($8). In our opinion, Southie is to steak tips what the North End is to pasta, and the 6 House's measure up. Veal scallopini and veal marsala, at $14, are the most expensive items on the menu.

The drink list runs the gamut from draft beers to specialty cocktails like the coconut martini, a sweet mango-and-rum concoction served in a coconut perched on a martini glass. The chocolate martini combines Bailey's, Kahlua and Stoli Vanil vodka in a glass dipped in Godiva chocolate and garnished with a strawberry, and it's tasty enough that guys might want to order an extra, for, you know, their dates. "Guys come in with their girlfriends, taste theirs, then order another one," Walsh says. Another proper summer drink is the mojito martini, which would be best enjoyed at the front of the room on a nice day, when the large windows are opened up to the sidewalk. 28 West Broadway, South Boston (617-268-6697). — Ezra Dyer

RIPPIN' IT UP

Unfazed by the demise of the WUSA women's pro soccer league and the well-publicized travails of the WNBA, the New England Riptide women's pro softball team plays its first home game against the Sacramento Sunbirds June 16, at Martin Field in Lowell. The Riptide join the Sunbirds, the New York/New Jersey Juggernaut, the Texas Thunder, the Akron Racers and the Arizona Heat in the inaugural season of the National Pro Fastpitch league. Riptide players hail from all over the country and include former Berkeley star pitcher Jocelyn Forest and two-time Division-I All-American Megan Matthews. BARON BAPTISTE

Locally speaking, if anyone's to blame for yoga's cultural blitzkrieg in recent years, all fingers should point to Baron Baptiste. Five years ago the yoga master/marketing genius opened the Baron Baptiste Power Yoga Institute in Cambridge. To the newcomer, Baptiste's vinyasa practice probably sounds like torture—bending into pretzel-like poses for 90 minutes in a room heated to 90 degrees (and yes, there's om-ing). But most who try it leave converted, and a second studio in Boston is evidence of Baptiste Power Yoga's cult-like following. On June 17, in honor of its fifth birthday, the Cambridge studio offers all classes for $5 (down from $12), and proceeds benefit the Cam Neely Foundation for Cancer Care. (Neely is a Power Yoga aficionado.) Here Baptiste talks about his yoga and its future in the mainstream.

IB: What's the biggest misconception people have about yoga?

BB: That you have to be kind of a new-ager or crunchy or super flexible, or that you need to become a vegetarian, or that you're basically just kind of weird.

IB: How do you know which type of yoga is right for you?

BB: It's good to sample. A lot of times it comes down to a teacher that you connect with or trust, that you feel safe and challenged in a class. If you try different styles, it's important with yoga that you give it a chance. You might not connect with a teacher, but the style might be right.

IB: More so than other sports and exercise, yoga seems to be a way of life. Why do you think that is?

BB: I think the phenomenon behind it is that it kind of finds you. You might walk into a yoga class thinking that you want to relieve stress or tone your abs, buns and thighs, and you discover something on a more holistic level. You feel mentally more clear and focused, and that kind of experience is very personal to people. A lot of times people are like, I've been wrestling with this habit for years and I just kind lost my taste, my compulsion for it. It can be very freeing, and with that kind of transformation, there's a tendency to share it, to share the love, so to speak.

IB: How have your studios changed over the past five years?

BB: I think when I first came to Boston and Cambridge, yoga practice was very stereotypical, and I think it fit more with a niche crowd who had already been initiated into yoga and holistic living. People who were into yoga started bringing their friends or family who might not be open to trying yoga. On that level, it started growing into a more mainstream crowd. We have firemen, postal workers, professors, students, politicians—people who traditionally would think that yoga is not for them at all. And when you get those mainstream people and they start sharing it, it just mushrooms.

IB: What do you think the next five years have in store for you and your studios?

BB: I think yoga, in general, is not going away. It's only going to spread more and more into the American lifestyle. I see it morphing and coming out of the trendy phase that it's been in. All the curiosity seekers came to check it out and they stay or they go. And if they stay, they become more educated and it raises the excellence of the style and presentation.—Jessica Iredale

I SCREAM!

Brigham On!... In honor of its 90th birthday, Boston-based Brigham's invited its fans to submit recipes and names for a new ice cream flavor. And it comes as no surprise that the winning flavor, which was just announced, has a Red Sox theme. Mary Kenny of Plymouth won a year's supply of ice cream, a freezer to keep it in and an ice cream party for 90 people for her idea for Reverse the Curse ice cream (a vanilla-based concoction with fudge swirls, chocolate-covered peanuts and chocolate-covered caramel cups). The limited-edition flavor hit major supermarkets throughout New England in mid May and already has the Sox stamp of approval. "We did a delivery to Fenway Park," says Brigham's Susan Butler, "and the response has been really great."

Dipping Sticks... If there's a dining concept that's underdone in this city, it's fondue. In fact, you'd be hard-pressed to find many restaurants (besides Anthem, with its yummy spinach and artichoke fondue, and Les Zygomates with its chocolate version) that offer it at all. But in two weeks, you can get your fondue fix at a new Mass. Ave. eatery called the Wine Cellar. According to general manager Thierry Charles, the menu will offer the fondue triumvirate—meat, cheese and chocolate—in more than 25 varieties. There will also be European appetizers—like assiette charcuterie with chicken galantine, rillettes and vegetarian terrine; and salad niçoise—and more than 600 wines. *30 Mass. In the Kitchen... The health-conscious purveyors of gourmet fare at Lucy's in Brookline recently welcomed new executive chef Eric Bogardus. If you've been at all hesitant to dine at an establishment that creates all dishes sans butter and cream, now's the time to overcome your reservations. Bogardus joins the team at Lucy's straight from a two-year gig as executive sous chef at Lock-Ober and, prior to that, Pignoli. Well-seasoned, indeed. 242 Harvard St., Brookline (617-232-5829). —E.H. and J.I.

SISTER ACT 2

This summer, two local pairs of sisters are looking to make it big with two new business ventures. First, Belmont/Brighton–based Kara and Jenna LaReau have created what could be the biggest thing in children's books since Thomas the Tank Engine went into rehab and ended up on Nickelodeon: True Hollywood Storytime. Their fun-loving twin sock monkeys, Rocko and Spanky, hit shelves May 15 with Rocko and Spanky Go to a Party, the first in what will be a series of books for Harcourt.

Meanwhile, Quincy sisters Christina and Lisa Trifone have made life that much sweeter for chocoholics with their new business, the Chocolate Dive, which creates chocolate fountains for events. The giant structures overflow with 22 lbs. of melted Belgian chocolate (into which party-goers dunk cookies, fruit and other goodies), enough to feed 200–250 people. For $450, the sisters set up a fountain and take the remnants away. Oompa Loompas not included. (617-823-0468).

SWEAT PROOF

Though sweating is actually good for your body (since it releases toxins), it can also be a nuisance. About three years ago, I heard about celebrities getting Botox injections under their arms to solve this little problem. To check out the procedure, I sent a friend with an excessive-sweating problem to Dr. Michael Kaminer at SkinCare Physicians of Chestnut Hill. After a quick examination, Kaminer injected my friend with 40 shots of Botox under each arm. The whole procedure took about 25 minutes, and was relatively painless, according to our subject. It took a week for the treatment to take effect, but now she simply does not sweat under her arms. The results last anywhere from six to 12 months, and the treatment costs around $1,500. 244 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill (617-731-1600). www.skincarephysicians.net. —Samantha House

Art for the Masses... After months of planning, the Nave Gallery, Art-Somerville's latest project, swung open its doors last month with a ribbon cutting ceremony/pancake breakfast. The bona fide gallery is set in a most unusual space—the Clarendon Hill Presbyterian Church. The non-profit group Art-Somerville helped the idea come together with the support of pastor Karl Gustafson, who volunteered the space within the church. "I really feel the church and arts are linked, and we wanted to support the Somerville arts community," Gustafson says. Exhibitions, with rotating guest curators, are expected to change every six to eight weeks, and the space will always feature the work of local artists. 155 Powderhouse Blvd., Somerville (617-625-4823). www.artsomerville. org.

Mighty Mighty Bustonian... The Bustonian guys are at it again. Their second party bus, the Mighty Bustonian, improves on the original with an even louder stereo, a club-style lighting system with more than 800 color combinations, plush custom-made seats, a six-foot dance floor and the crowning touch, an "entertainment pole," which in some circles is also known as a stripper pole. Next time you climb aboard this bus, don't forget to bring along some dollar bills. (866-462-8746).

REVVED UP

Mazda Rev It Up proves that I'm an excellent driver. Sort of like Rain Man.

It was my friend Burke's idea to enter Mazda's Rev It Up program when it came to town in May. For $40, Rev It Up gives you some driving instruction, followed by the chance to take two timed laps in a Mazda 3 on a twisty race course set up at the Weymouth Naval Air Station. Seven of us signed up, and the e-mail trash-talking commenced.

"You're so slow, you should leave now," I wrote to Burke. "You're so slow, you're going to get your race instruction from a Shriner. They're going to measure your laps in sea turtle life spans. Mazda's going to start a special program for you called Give It Up." Burke replied that I'd be too worried about keeping my combover in place to concentrate on driving. Burke's friend Dan chimed in with, "Speed is my mistress and she'll be riding with me on the 24th," which would have been a better boast if the race hadn't been on the 23rd.

The day of the competition, Clay earned a Did Not Finish before we even left Boston, since he was without his wallet and driver's license. There's a story behind why he didn't have his wallet, but it's a little embarrassing and he asked me not to write about it. So let's just say he got beat up by a transvestite hooker and move on.

When we arrived at the event and picked up our registration badges, I noticed Murph's said "Fun" and mine said "Pro." Murph explained that there were four competition classes based on driving experience, with Fun at the bottom and Pro at the top. I didn't know this because I'd let Burke sign me up, the dick. Now I'd be competing against the elite drivers while everyone else was timed against the dubs. To get some extra practice, I wandered over to the Beat the Crap out of Some Mazdas Center.

The Beat the Crap out of Some Mazdas Center (or, as Mazda likes to call it, the "Mazda Drive Center") was a separate track where you could take Mazda's other vehicles for a test drive. I don't think you were actually supposed to drive as fast as you could at the Mazda Drive Center, but a stallion like myself doesn't take slow for an answer. Thus, Clay and I climbed into a lowly base-model Mazda 3, and I proceeded to drive it like it had talked smack about my momma. After flying through the moose-avoidance chicane with the hammer down, I got on the brakes for a right-hand turn and…plowed off the course, making roadkill of a plastic cone. But you've got to get back on that horse, so I drove back onto the track and completed the rest of my lap at a similar velocity.

When we got in, a Mazda Rev It Up official strode over and glared at me as if I'd just run down a village of helpless peasants with a monster truck. He was on the short side, and looked like the kind of former jock who would make for a sadistic summer-camp counselor. I decided to break the ice: "Hi!" I said. "What was that all about?" he demanded. I gave him the logical explanation: It was the car's fault. The brakes felt like they were made of cheese, bro. And not even a hard cheese like Parmesan. We're talking warm Brie fondue. I'm just a good ol' boy. Never meaning no harm. "You're done here. You're done," he spat. Clay walked away, laughing for the first time all day. Mr. Chud was poised for confrontation, but I just said, "OK," and walked away feeling quite pleased with myself. Banned from the Mazda Drive Center for recklessness: I'm a bad boy.

So who won? Well, my best time around the course was 29.7 seconds, about two seconds off the day's best time but a second or two ahead of everyone I arrived with (Murph came close with a run in the 30-second range, but was fined four seconds on two counts of coneslaughter). In fact, if I'd been in the Fun class instead of Pro, I would've been in third place on the leader board, a fact I pointed out to Burke. "But you wouldn't have been in the Fun class!" he said. "You had professional driving instruction before this, so you'd be in Novice, where you wouldn't even be in the top 15!" I beg to differ. I would've been in the Fun class, because I would've lied about my driving experience on the questionnaire. If it asked, "have you ever driven a car on a track before?" I would've answered, "What's a car?" I love competing against the disadvantaged; if there was a place where I could arm-wrestle second-graders, I'd be there every day. And if that seems unsportsmanlike, talk to the two guys in the Fun class who beat me. iB

"WHAT WAS THAT ALL ABOUT?" THE MAZDA OFFICIAL DEMANDED. I GAVE HIM THE LOGICAL EXPLANATION: IT WAS THE CAR'S FAULT.

YOU THINK THAT'S FUNNY?

MICHAEL SCHLOW

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPH BY JOE GREENE

Recognized as one of America's leading chefs, Michael Schlow is executive chef and co-owner of Radius, Via Matta and Great Bay. Born in Brooklyn, Schlow went to school in New Jersey and studied cooking at that state's Academy of Culinary Arts before beginning his career with renowned New York chef Pino Luongo. After stints as chef de cuisine at Manhattan hot spots Coco Pazzo and Le Madri, Schlow became executive chef at Sapore di Mare, on Long Island, and then launched the Hamptons mainstay 75 Main before returning to New York. After relocating to Boston in 1995 and earning acclaim at Café Louis, he opened Radius, featuring modern French cuisine, and followed up on its phenomenal success with Via Matta, an Italian restaurant, and Great Bay, which focuses on seafood. His numerous accolades include being named one of the Best New Chefs in the nation by Food & Wine in 1996, a James Beard award for Best Chef in the Northeast in 2000, a Robert Mondavi Culinary Award of Excellence, and the honor of twice cooking for Julia Child on her birthday. Active in numerous charities, Schlow has recently completed a cookbook, It's About Time, which will be published by Steerforth Press. He lives in Westwood.

Jonathan Soroff: Most memorable meal you ever cooked?

Michael Schlow: Hmm. Probably for my family, the first year I cooked dinner the night before Yom Kippur. I thought, "We're gonna starve ourselves tomorrow," so I made a six- or seven-course tasting menu the night before, and now it's become a tradition.

JS: Rate the food critics in Boston.

MS: To be honest, I wish the critics were harder on us, because the more difficult the food critics are, the better the restaurants will become. They could be tougher. I also think they should be anonymous. We know who too many of them are, so they're not getting the same meal the average Joe would. Publications in New York change their restaurant critics every four or five years and guard their anonymity for a reason.

JS: McDonald's or Burger King?

MS: Burger King, no question. McDonald's is the world's most consistent restaurant, but Burger King, for flavor, tastes better to me.

JS: Any guilty pleasures—Funyuns, Cheez Whiz, Cap'n Crunch?

MS: A New York City slice of pizza. I used to eat one every day. Hebrew National hot dogs. God, is that good. But I guess my ultimate, which I can't refuse, ever, is an Almond Joy.

JS: Most obnoxious person you ever cooked for?

MS: There are so many, and a few of them were so annoying that I was tempted to come out of the kitchen and say, "This isn't the restaurant for you." I've never actually done that, although I have asked someone to leave when they've insulted a member of our staff. I've said, "We're in the service business, not the servile business. You've got to go." People that obnoxious deserve to get kicked out.

JS: Ever had someone taste something you've cooked and make a disgusted face?

MS: Yeah, my Mom. My mother's a great cook and she knows good food, and she confided to me after the fact that food I'd made was really terrible.

JS: Grossest thing you've ever eaten?

MS: Hands down, it was in Hawaii, and they served raw baby squid stuffed with raw anchovies in a sauce made of fermented black beans, kinda sticky and gooey. It was a specialty of the house, and a delicacy, and it was like eating salty rubber bands. I couldn't get it down.

JS: Rarest cooking ingredient you ever heard of?

MS: Ortilan. It's a bird they eat, mostly in France. You can get them here, but they're rare, and the ritual is to cook them in a consommé that has a little bit of truffle, and when you eat it, you either take a napkin or the whole tablecloth and put it over your head so you smell the steam from the consommé, and you eat the bird whole—bones, innards, et cetera.

JS: Favorite red meat?

MS: I do love squab, which is not technically a red meat, or a four-legged red meat at least. Other than that, I'm a big fan of venison.

IF [A RECIPE] DOESN'T COME OUT RIGHT, EITHER GO OUT TO DINNER OR START OVER. LIFE'S TOO SHORT TO EAT BAD FOOD.

JS: Hardest thing for you to cook, or thing that takes the most technical know-how?

MS: Technically, the hardest thing to cook, no contest, is pasta. Perfect pasta is impossible. You have to cook it thousands of times before you approach getting it right. It's something Americans don't really appreciate, even though we eat a lot of it.

JS: So how do you do it?

MS: Well, ignore the old wives' tales. Put oil in the water? No. Drain it under cold water? No. None of that is true. But if you buy my book, you'll learn the secrets of great pasta. [Laughs.]

JS: Three things every person should have in their refrigerator?

MS: I'd say some form of hot sauce, preferably Frank's Extra Hot Sauce, as I think it is the best; it goes well on eggs, sandwiches, just about anything. They should also have bleu cheese, because you never know when you're going to need it. And Hellmann's mayonnaise.

JS: Most chefs don't really cook at home. Do you?

MS: All the time. Even though I work every day, I probably cook at home three nights a week.

JS: Ever do the dishes?

MS: Always. I hate to do dishes almost as much as I hate chopping parsley, but it's part of the job.

JS: If they were going to name a dish after you, and generations from now people would order a Michael Schlow whatever, what would it be and why?

MS: Maybe this crispy chicken dish that I've been working on. Crispy chicken with a spicy hoisin sauce, and a squeeze of lime over the top. It's for an Asian restaurant I'd like to build, and they could call it General Schlow's Chicken.

JS: Best seduction recipe?

MS: Two words: Lobster risotto. The man or woman in your life will know that you love them if you stand there and stir for 20 minutes. Guaranteed hookup. And you should do it in nothing but an apron.

JS: Single most important kitchen tool?

MS: The ability to read a recipe—and confidence.

JS: Is there a silver bullet if you screw up?

MS: No. Just start over. Honestly, at all of our restaurants, if, for example, someone gets up from the table to go to the bathroom and their entrée is ready, we have no heat lamps. We throw it in the garbage and start over. So if it doesn't come out right, either go out to dinner or start over. Life's too short to eat bad food.

JS: Thing you make the most money from in your restaurants?

MS: Contrary to popular belief, it's not pasta, because really good extra-virgin olive oil, really good Italian tomatoes, all that stuff costs money. It's not even soup anymore, because the expectations with soup are like lobster and caviar and truffles. I'd say our biggest moneymaker now at Via Matta is bruschetta, because it's day-old bread grilled with a topping, and at Radius, everything is kinda priced out. The stuff we used to make money off of when I was starting out—calamari, mussels, clams—are expensive now.

JS: How do I get a reservation for 8 o'clock on a Saturday night when I remember tomorrow is my husband's birthday?

MS: Actually, day of is your best bet, and three days before is your worst. The best thing is to call any good restaurant around one or two o'clock, because that's when they're calling to confirm reservations and people are saying, "Oh! We can't make it!"

JS: So what's sexier: being a chef or a billionaire?

MS: Well, I'll say this, and I mean it in all humility: People like cooking. There's something nurturing and creative and mysterious and sexy about it. You made it with your own two hands. It's a craft, and it's my calling. So from my point of view, cooking's a beautiful profession. It combines history, art, chemistry, everything. It's an amazing job.

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

KILLING TIME TILL OCTOBER

The Red Sox are playoff bound; six degrees of Danny Ainge

It's only June, but here's a revelation: The Boston Red Sox are going to the playoffs, guaranteed. As for winning the World Series, that's another story. But for the Red Sox not to make the playoffs, well, it's just not possible.

It doesn't matter that D-Lowe has had trouble D-livering lately; his resume says he'll rebound before the real games begin. And sure, Byung-Hyun Kim and Ramiro Mendoza are stealing money while providing zero help. But let's be honest, it doesn't matter.

Why?

Cash. The Red Sox have lots of it. And like the New York Yankees, if there's a problem somewhere in the starting rotation or with Nomar Garciaparra's Achilles, John Henry's checkbook will be there to find a suitable replacement. Open your eyes in Fenway Park and you can't miss the revenue streams—new seats, concessions and advertisements everywhere. The only place left for advertisements is the players' backs. (You remember the big, gaudy billboard-type ads on the backs of Little Leaguers? Mine was the Peabody Teachers Federation; maybe they'd consider buying space on Manny's shirt if the Sox need cash to pick up a quality middle reliever during the stretch run.) As former Sox slugger Mo Vaughn use to say, "It's not about the money." And it really isn't when you have plenty of it. The Red Sox will do fine, even if they end up with more injuries than the Patriots.

> WITH THE PLAYOFFS INEVITABLE, THE REMAINDER OF THE SEASON IS REALLY A TUNE-UP FOR THE POSTSEASON.

With the playoffs inevitable, the remainder of the season is really a tune-up for the postseason. Manager Terry Francona should be trying out different combinations in the field, as well as mixing up the batting order. He's got a little less than four months to figure out who's the best No. 2 hitter behind Johnny Damon; whether Nomar can handle batting fourth or even fifth; and whether Bill Mueller will ever again be the guy who stunned baseball the first five months of last year and ultimately won the batting title.

If you look at the makeup of the team with Nomar and Nixon back on the scene, the only true question mark is who deserves the mythical title of ace, since virtually every other slot is wrapped up. In years past, any time a series was on the line, the manager in place would call Pedro. But now Red Sox Nation is divided, and probably more fans are in Sheriff Schilling's corner. Who's the real go-to, No. 1 pitcher, Pedro or Schilling? You're in a good position when that's one of your big questions at this point in the season.

Despite there being a few minor problems (OK, maybe Lowe's ERA isn't that minor), the Red Sox are built for October. They have two aces on the mound, a great bullpen and, with Nomar and Nixon back in the fold, one of the best lineups in baseball. The key will be winning games in October, and Sox management should always have that in the back of their minds.

As for you Red Sox fans, have a nice summer. Get some sun. Take a ride to the beach. Save up your passion for when it's going to be needed most: the fall.

Even when Celtics director of basketball operations Danny Ainge was a baseball player, he was really a basketball player.

When Ainge was in the Toronto Blue Jays system, playing AAA ball in Syracuse, he spent a lot of his time running up to the Carrier Dome, playing pickup basketball with members of the Syracuse University team. Despite being paid a nice baseball salary—and he struggled mightily with the bat in his hands—he worked little on his game. Ainge's passion was basketball.

One of the guys who took a liking to Ainge was a veteran nearing the end of his career. His name was Dave Wallace, and he's now the Red Sox pitching coach. Wallace and Ainge briefly played together in Toronto, and when Ainge landed his current job with the Celtics, Wallace called him to say congratulations. The Sox pitching coach is still waiting for a return phone call from his old buddy. If that call finally comes in late October, wouldn't it be wonderful if Wallace could offer Ainge advice on winning a championship? IB

A drink MAN woman

BY ALICIA ABELL

PHOTOGRAPH BY ERIC LEVIN

y sister called a few weeks ago, on the verge of tears. "It's Billy," she said. Oh no, I thought. This new relationship seemed to be going so well. Was he turning into a commitment-phobe? Flaking on plans? "No, no. That's all great," she said. "It's the food. We eat pizza constantly. Ice cream is a nightly occurrence. I haven't drunk this much beer since college. I feel like a sumo wrestler."

She's not alone. According to Ellen Albertson, a Boston-based dietitian, certified personal fitness trainer and co-author (with her husband, Michael) of Food as Foreplay: Recipes for Romance, Love and Lust (see box below), it's not unusual for a woman to gain up to 10 pounds when she starts dating someone seriously. And research shows that both men and women gain weight in the first few years of marriage.

Food can put stress on relationships in other ways as well. Anna, a 24-year-old content producer from Brighton, and Andrew, a 28-year-old acoustical engineer from Natick, can't agree on anything edible: She loves creamy dishes; he despises them. He can't get his food hot enough; she thinks rosemary chicken is too spicy. Once they even fought over…the Olive Garden. "I love it, but he won't go," Anna says. "We weren't screaming, but I was definitely pouting," she says. "I was pretty upset."

Whether it's weight gain or food fights, dining differences can cause some sticky situations in a relationship. Here's what Boston couples have to say about clashes in the kitchen—and how to resolve them.

THE FEMALE FACTOR

Stereotype or not, it's usually the woman in a relationship who's more concerned about what, and how much, she eats. (Blame the media—and biology: Scientifically speaking, most men can eat much more than women without gaining weight.) This means that having a boyfriend or spouse who eats a lot of junk—or just a lot, period—can be a trial.

Consider Erica, a 29-year-old speech pathologist who lives in the South End with her fiancé, Bryce, a 31-year-old investment banker. Erica never quite realized how much Bryce ate until she moved to Boston a year ago. For the first three years, the couple had a long-distance relationship. "So when she was talking, I'd just put the conference phone at work on mute and munch," Bryce says.

"I have an unending thirst for food," he admits. "I tend to like high-carb, high-protein diets, and I don't discriminate based on time of day." One time, while on vacation, he ordered banana nut French toast and chili fries—at 10 in the morning. He's also a late-night eater, which means pepperoni pizza and fried chicken wings at 11 pm. Despite his total disregard for calories or fat, Bryce has actually lost weight since he and Erica moved in together. (How unfair is that?) "I definitely do eat more healthfully now," he says, mostly because Erica does the cooking and the grocery shopping.

This scenario—guy dates girl, guy eats something green for the first time in years—is not uncommon. Dennis, a 41-year-old salesperson from Sturbridge, was "brought up on Wonder bread, Ring Dings, Tastykakes and bologna sandwiches," says his wife, Andrea, 36, also in sales. "When we first met, his favorite dinner was a huge steak, a baked potato with sour cream, iceberg lettuce with blue cheese dressing and beer."

Now, Dennis doesn't eat red meat or chicken—and loves the difference. "I can really tell when I've been on the road for a few weeks and not eating that well," he says. "I feel lethargic, run down." His favorite dish? Kale potato soup.

The typical male-female dynamic isn't a one-way street, though. When Jamie, a 30-year-old teacher from Somerville, first met her husband, 31-year-old lawyer Matt, "I was into annoying-girl eating," she says. "No fat, no red meat, that type of thing." But after having a delicious dinner together one night, "I was like, 'What am I missing?!' Since knowing Matt, my habits have gotten much more relaxed. He's really expanded my eating."

Now, Jamie says, "I feel healthier and get a greater variety of foods. Part of it could be that I feel better about myself with Matt, and a lot of why women obsess about food is when they don't feel good about themselves."

STEREOTYPE OR NOT, IT'S USUALLY THE WOMAN IN A RELATIONSHIP WHO'S MORE CONCERNED ABOUT WHAT, AND HOW MUCH, SHE EATS.

FOOD FOR LOVE

Eating is a sensual experience. Food can be a real turn-on," says Ellen Albertson, co-host, with her husband, Michael, of the radio show The Cooking Couple (Sundays, 1–3 pm, WBNW-AM 1120 and WPLM-AM 1390). Here's what Albertson has to say about keeping things spicy—in and out of the kitchen.

Embrace your inner animal. "Food in the animal kingdom has always been a love offering," says Albertson. (So that's why we bring chocolates on Valentine's Day.) Understand that when you're cooking for people, you're also nurturing—and wooing—them, she says. Turns out gagging down that tofu could be in your best interests.

Explore aphrodisiacs. Everyone knows that chocolate arouses the same feelings that we experience when we're in love, but what about pumpkin seeds? They contain an amino acid the body needs to make nitric oxide, the same chemical compound that Viagra targets. Think of them as natural Levitra.

Any kind of seafood is good too. "It's light, protein-rich and very nutritious," says Albertson. "If you eat it over the long term, you'll be more sexually vital." Not in the mood because you're tired? "Coffee drinkers are statistically more sexually active than non–coffee drinkers," she says. Who knew?

Signal your senses. Eating involves the same senses we use in making love, including smell. The Smell and Taste Treatment and Research Foundation in Chicago found that the combined smells of black licorice and doughnuts significantly increase penile blood flow in men. Women were aroused by the scents of Good & Plenty candy and cucumbers. Smell is a primitive but powerful sense we sometimes neglect, Albertson says. Apparently so.

Dine as a duo. The most basic advice of all: Don't forget to do it (eat together, that is). Couples who sit down and share a meal a few times a week have more stable relationships, says Albertson. This is especially important when you live together. "It's very easy to find yourselves complete roommates," she says. "You need those touchstones."

FOOD FIGHTS

Some couples have even more than the usual share of food strife to deal with. Back Bay couple Craig, a 32-year-old private equity associate, and his wife, Maureen, a 34-year-old strategy consultant, are almost comic in their incompatibilities. He's allergic to seafood and legumes (beans, peas and peanuts); she's allergic to wheat. He can't eat most Middle Eastern dishes, which she loves; she can't eat most Italian, one of his favorites. Mexican? Dream on. He can't have beans; she can't have flour tortillas.

These constraints not only make meal-sharing tough, they can also cause tension. Craig's allergies are pretty obvious—he doesn't order fish—but wheat is often a hidden ingredient, found in everything from soy sauce to clam chowder. "He sees his allergies as easy to handle, while I have to be a pain in the ass, go talk to the kitchen," says Maureen. "He gets annoyed sometimes because I have to ask about everything."

The adventurous type and the faint of stomach are another common pair. Rachel, 31, who co-owns a Back Bay publishing company with her husband, adores ethnic food. In contrast, Jonathan, 29, can't stomach anything spicy: no garlic, onions, Indian or Thai. Even tapas are a problem. "He'll try to roll with it, but it's just clear when he gets there that he's not happy," Rachel says.

Jamie remembers fighting with her ex-boyfriend because all he ever wanted was American and junk food: "To him, a nice meal out was going to Chili's." It was too bad, she says, because "it's fun to go on a little food adventure, to say, 'We're gonna share this chocolate fondue because it's kind of fun and kind of sexy,' or 'Whoo-hoo! Let's try whatever's on the menu!'"

"Otherwise, it gets sort of…vanilla."

EATING IN THE MIDDLE

Let's face it: Food matters. "Personally, I think if you've got big food issues, you shouldn't be together," says Albertson, the dietitian. But for the most part, Boston couples disagree. "I think unwillingness to compromise is more of an issue than different eating habits," says Jonathan.

He and Rachel get takeout together—from different places. Sure, it's a pain, but at least they're both happy. Andrea decided that in order to convert Dennis, she needed to become a fantastic cook. "I would put something in front of him that would taste so good he didn't care," she says. Now Dennis likes bulgur meatballs better than regular ones and prefers tofu in his lasagna. (However, you need to be patient and persistent if you choose this route, Andrea warns. "I've had some scary flops," she says.)

Other solutions are simpler. Pan-Asian restaurants, with their wide-ranging menus, are great choices for couples with disparate tastes and eating habits. Craig and Maureen gravitate toward Japanese restaurants, where she can get sushi and he orders meat-and-noodle dishes. Concerned about matching your man bite for bite? Limit yourself to half to two-thirds of what he's eating, advises Albertson.

That's what my sister decided to do. "The main thing I'm doing is focusing on portion control," she says, "and remembering that he's a boy and can eat more than I can."

I have a good feeling about this Billy guy, especially in comparison with her last boyfriend. There was always something a little suspect about him. I mean, what kind of person doesn't eat chocolate? iB

let's do brunch... again

BY ERIN HAGEDORN AND JESSICA IREDALE PHOTOGRAPHS BY BRIAN SILVERSTEIN

Two years ago, a few IMPROPER staffers loosened their belts and embarked on a multiweekend binge to unearth the city's most interesting brunch offerings. Many eggs Benedicts later, the intrepid eaters reported on some notable weekend brunches around the city—and put together a guide to nearly 100 brunch offerings in the city and nearby suburbs. Reader response was so enthusiastic that we decided to update our research for this year's Dining Issue. This time, we're highlighting six restaurants that have started serving brunch in the past year. The new offerings include everything from traditional fare like French toast and frittatas to more unusual menu items like breakfast tacos, roasted lamb, and lobster omelets.

We've updated our brunch chart too. It lists oodles of brunch spots throughout the city—from cheap eats that will soothe your hangover to $60 buffets perfect for impressing the in-laws.

BRAVO

One of the fanciest brunches in town started last year at the Museum of Fine Arts' swank restaurant, Bravo. Here, brunch-goers dine in the roomy, art-filled space overlooking the museum's courtyard or, during warm weather, outside on the terrace. While you decide whether to go for the two-course option ($28) or the three ($34), which includes dessert, try not to fill up on the delicious baked goods in the bread basket: croissants, mini scones, little muffins and warm breads. Many of the prix fixe menu items change regularly, but a favorite first course is the smoked salmon with dill potato salad, white sturgeon caviar and horseradish dressing. Another great choice is the poached jumbo shrimp with avocado, papaya and lime salsa. Like the works on display in the museum's galleries, chef Benjamin Cevelo's delicious dishes are beautifully made. He serves the salad of butter lettuce and cucumber with crème fraîche dressing in a giant, flowerlike arrangement, dotted with beads of dressing and sprinkled with bright, diced peppers. Similarly, the entrée of handmade spinach pasta with artichokes, asparagus, tomato and ricotta comes spiraled in a bowl, and Bravo's stylish, colorful serving dishes add to the presentation. If you're more in the mood for breakfast food, you should opt for the popular buttermilk pancakes with bananas, passion fruit butter and apple-wood smoked bacon. Dessert-wise, you can't go wrong with the chocolate bread pudding or the more summery strawberry rhubarb fool with ginger-infused ice cream. To go with your meal, you can choose from several cocktails or wines by the glass ($7.50–$12), but we wholeheartedly recommend the fresh-squeezed tangerine mimosa ($10.50), which is out of this world.

Sat. and Sun., 11:30 am–3 pm. $28–$34. 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-369-3474).

THE SUMMER SHACK

When the House of Blues closed down last year, most of us thought that Gospel Brunch was a thing of the past. The good news is that the Gospel Brunch has been resurrected, so to speak, at the Cambridge Summer Shack. Owner and chef Jasper White launched the weekly event this past Mother's Day, and he brought back many of the same people involved at the House of Blues, including sultry singer and emcee Katani. The Summer Shack's rustic-industrial decor looks like it was cobbled together from souvenir stands on Route 28. Its brunch has a neighborly atmosphere—most people eat at long, communal tables near the stage. You can't help but gorge yourself (the fifth deadly sin) on the macaroni, corn bread, hush puppies, fried chicken and home fries, and it does feel a tad blasphemous drinking mimosas while listening to the word of God. But what's most sinful is the praline French toast. It's a gooey, bread pudding–like concoction smothered in sweet maple syrup. You'll want to have your second helping of it by 12:30, because once the gospel show/sermon starts, eating pretty much grinds to a halt. Warning: when the show starts, participation is mandatory. You've got to sway and pray, but it's easy to get into the spirit as Katani and the week's featured band rouse everyone to their feet, waving, clapping and singing songs like "This Little Light of Mine." In between the spiritual numbers, some of which are mellow enough that you can sit down and sneak a sip of your mimosa, Katani reads scripture. Amen. Reservations recommended.

Sun., 11:30 am. $35 (children $25). 149 Alewife Brook Pkwy., Cambridge (617-520-9500).

LEGAL SEA FOODS

After a 50-years-plus reign as the local seafood titan, Legal finally introduced its first-ever Sunday brunch exclusively at the Charles Square location in March. Legal fans (and there are plenty—Legal was voted most popular restaurant in Zagat's 2003/04 Boston survey) have likely been chomping at the bit for a bite of lobster omelet, or salmon and eggs à la Legal. After a sampling of the goods (read: gorging to the point of discomfort), the verdict is in: Legal's brunch was worth the wait. The menu is stocked with tempting brunch–meets–seafood restaurant items: poached eggs Oscar and lobster Florentine, Cajun shrimp and andouille omelet, etc. There's a nod to more traditional brunch fare too—like brioche French toast with Vermont maple syrup and fresh fruit; or mushroom frittata with romano cheese, apple-smoked bacon and salad. Don't miss out on the warm popovers served while you weigh your options. They're sweet, crisp and airy and made from the same ingredients as the brioche French toast. Hearty appetites will likely go for the lobster, goat cheese and chive omelet, and a heavyweight portion of crispy, seasoned home fries. Whatever you choose, consider the fruit parfait as an aperitif. It is, in a word, awesome. Strawberries, pineapple and cantaloupe are ripened to perfection, and the homemade yogurt is a delicious combo of sweet and tart. As for Bloody Marys, the classic brunch beverage, Legal offers three types: traditional, Asian (with wasabi, soy sauce and ginger) and Red Tide (with Sauza Gold tequila). Or you can opt for a flight—three one-ounce servings of each.

UNION BAR AND GRILLE

The local dining scene has been abuzz with talk of Seth Woods' (Aquitaine, Armani Café) latest venture, Union, since its opening in October, in the South End. On any given night, the dining room is filled with clientele as sleek as the black leather booths and wrought iron chandeliers, the food has critics smitten, and at the time of this article, weekend reservations were booked through July. This place is just cool—and maybe a little intimidating. But come Sunday morning, the scenester vibe is replaced with a relaxed, neighborhood feeling. Bright sunlight (the window seats almost require sunglasses) bathes the entire restaurant, and diners wearing T-shirts and jeans quietly chat over eggs Benedict and Bloody Marys. The simple, understated atmosphere leaves the spotlight on the deserving food. Asparagus and goat cheese omelets, and crisp New England codcakes with two poached eggs and hollandaise both come with seasoned home fries and choice of toast or a bagel. The beef and Andouille sausage burger with Vermont cheddar and Cobb salad appeases the post-breakfast crowd, and the B-52 French toast with orange marmalade and smoked bacon is the bomb. Even better are the prices, which match the more casual atmosphere.

Sun., 10 am–3 pm. $6–$14. 1357 Washington St., Boston (617-423-0555).

SCOLLAY SQUARE

For a neighborhood that's generally considered short on dining options, Beacon Hill does pretty well in the brunch department. Panificio, Beacon Hill Hotel & Bistro, Harvard Gardens and the grand dame of brunches, Hampshire House, are all old favorites. But if you're in the mood for something new, head up the hill to Scollay Square, a cozy joint nestled in the shadow of the State House. Brunch is set to the tune of Frank Sinatra and other big-band-era music, and a swift wait staff serves you. Dark wood fixtures, cathedral ceilings, and simple table settings combine with black-and-white photographs of the old Scollay Square neighborhood, politicians and burlesque performers to create a retro vibe in an upscale-yet-comfortable setting. The menu lists seven items—an even mix of sweet and savory ranging from simple broiled grapefruit with brown sugar and dark rum to a brawny 12-ounce New York sirloin with scrambled eggs and rosemary home fries. French toast stuffed with cream cheese, fresh raspberries, preserves and fresh berry syrup is crisp, fluffy and a dentist's worst nightmare (or dream?). The breakfast tacos (three per serving), filled with either potato and egg or chorizo and egg, are satisfying but not overstuffed. And if you're looking for a little Sunday morning buzz, the premium Kona coffee packs a punch that puts Starbucks to shame, and the mimosas are made with freshly squeezed orange juice sweeter than almost any you've tasted.

Sun., 10 am–2 pm. $6–$19. 21 Beacon St., Boston (617-742-4900).

TANGIERINO

Tangierino's decor alone (elaborate tapestries, gilded-canopied tables and a deep red and purple color scheme straight out of a North African palace) sets it apart from other eateries, and if you wander in on a Sunday afternoon, you'll feel like you're in on a big secret. Launched in mid May, the Sultan's Sunday Brunch, as it's called, hasn't yet caught on with the masses, so privacy is virtually guaranteed. Just as exotic as the atmosphere is the menu. Instead of brunch ubiquities like eggs Benedict, omelets and pancakes, Tangierino's four-course, prix-fixe meal offers decidedly more unique fare. In fact, you'd be hard-pressed to find an egg anywhere. The meal starts off with a choice of Moroccan mint tea or Champagne, followed by Moroccan pizza, which is similar to a simple cheese quesadilla served with a tomato and pepper ragout. Next is vegetable couscous and whole-roasted lamb so tender it can be cut with a fork. Dessert is a sweet Moroccan pastry of shortbread-like dough served with heavy whipped cream and sugar. Courses arrive one-by-one in true Moroccan grandeur, wheeled out on carts and kept warm under ceramic covers. After your server brings a bowl of rosewater to wash your hands, you'll leave feeling like a sultan indeed. IB

some like it COLD

Anyone for black pepper gelato? How about basil and pepperoncini sorbet? This summer, Boston chefs are serving up some exotic frozen treats that aren't necessarily for dessert.

BY JUDITH GAINES PHOTOGRAPHS BY TONY SCARPETTA

There they were, as cute as buttons: four dainty dollops of tomato and olive oil sorbet, each one perched atop a littleneck clam on its half shell, each shell holding a soupçon of sherry and pink peppercorn marinade with grilled ramp mignonette, the whole concoction sitting on a perfect circle of decorative coarse white salt. As I sampled this lovely appetizer, the slight sweetness of the tomato offset the brininess of the clams, and the olive oil gave a rich, warming aftertaste to the cold sorbet.

The setting was the Beacon Hill Hotel & Bistro, where head chef Benjamin Knack, 28, was testing some creations he'll unveil this summer. Among the other new tastes are saffron sorbet over scallop seviche, gazpacho with a scoop of a mildly fennel-flavored sorbet called anise-hyssop, and a warm asparagus and cold lobster salad with mushroom ice cream.

Mushroom ice cream? Tomato and olive oil sorbet? Served as appetizers? Well, why not start your meal with ice cream?

These are savory ice creams and sorbets, no sugar added. What they add to a dish are dimensions of flavor, texture and temperature, giving chefs like Knack more ways to create what he calls "the roundest possible plate," full of contrasting tastes. And the dishes aren't all that wild and crazy, Knack explains. In a more traditional presentation of the littlenecks, for instance, they might be served on a bed of ice, with a tomato-based dipping sauce. In his version, the tomato is the ice, which helps to keep the clams cold while also adding beauty and whimsy.

Knack is one of many local chefs currently experimenting with unusual ice creams and sorbets. After a brutally cold winter and a wet spring, summer is the time for Bostonians to let loose, and nothing says summer quite as emphatically as ice cream does. In cafés, bistros, restaurants and ice cream shops all over the city, patrons will be able to choose from a huge range of exotic frozen treats, as well as more conventional favorites, sometimes in surprising combinations.

Boston's impresario of adventure may be Alex Stupak, the 24-year-old dessert wizard at Clio, in the Eliot Hotel. He's making ice cream from orris root, an ingredient he claims has not been used in cooking "for about 300 years." That may be because it has the aroma of baby powder. But it pairs well with fresh raspberries, Stupak says, which is how he intends to serve it.

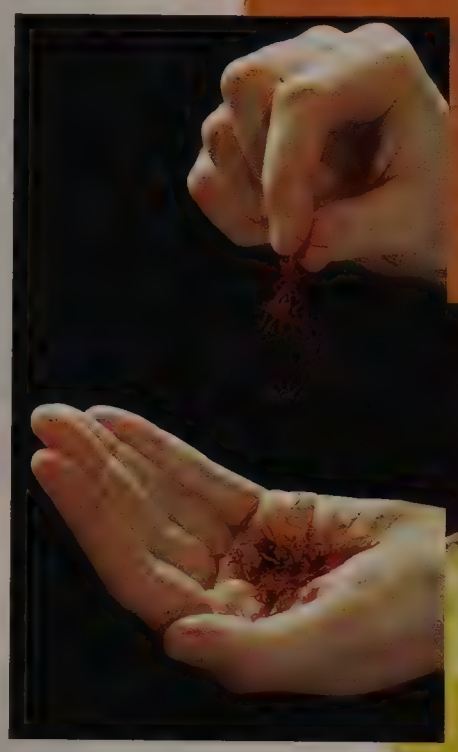
Another creative delight is Stupak's cold black currant capsule, a frozen cylinder of intense black currant puree filled with crème de cassis, served with vanilla ice cream and violet marmalade. His dense, square chocolate pudding comes with eucalyptus ice cream, milk foam and a beautiful green peppermint granité so finely pulverized that he calls it "powder." Also in the works is his version of a gin and tonic: a sorbet made from quinquina, the tree bark that gives us quinine, served with lemon-lime foam and juniper gelée.

At Sage, in the North End, chef Anthony Susi is playing with more well-known ice creams but in unusual combinations. This summer he'll serve a hot, earthy mushroom soup poured over mascarpone ice cream; prune sorbet with a foie gras terrine; and basil ice cream in a tomato water soup.

If all this seems just too outré, head for Christina's Ice Cream, near Inman Square, where the novelties are more approachable. Owner Ray Ford's ice cream is so good that he supplies about 300 restaurateurs in Greater Boston, arguably some of the area's pickiest eaters. With butterfat content at 14 percent or more, these glaces are not for the faint of heart. But the ingredients are fresh, and flavors are intriguing. This summer, in addition to the well-known standbys, Christina's will sell ice cream flavors including black sesame, saffron, herbal chai (made with South African red tea), corn, a tangy crème fraîche, and an ice cream with fennel pollen.

At Les Zygomates, pastry chef Meg Paine says her challenge is to create frozen desserts without an ice cream maker, because the bistro doesn't have one. Lemon chiboust is one of her favorites—a cream-flavored with lemon zest and perhaps a touch of limoncello liqueur, lightened with meringue, frozen, and then sprinkled with sugar and torched as if it were a crème brûlée to give it a caramelized sugar crust. "It's a showstopper," he enthuses.

At Bricco, in the North End, executive chef Marisa Iocco has just bought a jazzy new gelato machine and hopes to offer 24 flavors—count them—this summer. Her frozen cornucopia includes basil and pepperoncino sorbet and black pepper gelato, both served as a refreshing dessert or as a side dish with cheeses or sautéed vegetables.



Like many ice cream aficionados, Iocco has loved the stuff for as long as she can remember. She craves it daily, especially in the summer after a long day in a hot kitchen. "Every night before I go to bed, I have a big plate of gelato," she says. "It's something my body needs."

Yankees eat more ice cream per capita than any other region of the country, according to David James, pastry chef at Le Soir in Newton. And why not, with all the great New England dairies—and plenty of ice. "It's the perfect food. I love ice cream, oh my God!" he says. The very thought takes James back to happy days on his family's farm, where they hand-cranked ice cream every summer. Now his creations include lavender ice cream, white pepper ice cream, lemongrass sorbet, pinot noir sorbet, Guinness ice cream and a frozen pink peppercorn mousse.

The key to helping patrons enjoy unconventional flavors is to pair them with classics, James says, "so you don't push people over the edge." He serves his lavender ice cream with sautéed strawberries and meringue, for instance; the Guinness ice cream accompanies a chocolate hazelnut "pop tart," and the frozen pink peppercorn mousse comes with a caramelized pineapple parfait.

At Spire, in the Nine Zero Hotel, chef Gabriel Frasca says his "ice cream itch" started about six years ago, when he and his girlfriend, chef Amanda Lydon (now a chef at Upstairs on the Square), discovered an old ice cream maker in a "take-it-or-leave-it" shed on Nantucket. As they began experimenting with their find, Frasca realized that ice cream has all the qualities he appreciates most—"the texture of a rich soup or a foie gras butter, the best elements of a well-balanced sauce, a clear extraction of flavor in an emulsion that just happens to get frozen. Plus, it can be gorgeous," he says.

Among the flavors Frasca will offer this summer are white pepper–goat cheese ice cream, buttermilk sorbet, anise-hyssop ice cream, carrot ice cream, basil sorbet, and toasted grape-nuts ice cream in a sandwich. To keep the textures at their best, he melts the ice creams and respins them daily.

At Meritage in the Boston Harbor Hotel, chef Daniel Bruce describes himself as "a purist" who doesn't believe in savory ice creams. But he's playing with several sweet new creations, including his own version of a malted milk ball: a little frozen sphere of malted chocolate ice cream dipped in a thin shell of dark chocolate and decorated with a white chocolate stripe.

Frank McClelland, L'Espalier's head chef, says he doesn't like to plan too far in advance. "I let the inspiration run with whatever comes through the door," he says, meaning whatever ingredients come to him from local farms and other purveyors. But he expects to serve a basil–crème fraîche ice cream over a bittersweet chocolate custard tart sprinkled with pistachios, and also a frozen white peach soufflé.

Like McClelland, Philip Aviles, chef at Masa in the South End, loves the velvety texture of a frozen soufflé. He's serving what he calls a "tower," a chilled mango soufflé with a tropical fruit salsa that has a touch of jalapeño. A few blocks away, at Nightingale, chef/co-owner Michael Burgess says he likes to stay "on the safe side" with his food. But he's awaiting the arrival of the summer corn crop to make his sweet corn ice cream, which has what he calls "a cult following."

"There's something about ice cream that's so fun," Burgess says. "It melts in your mouth, sliding over your palate like silk, cold and great on a hot day. It takes everyone back to their childhood, like the time their grandparents took them out for ice cream, or maybe their family stopped to get ice cream cones on Sunday, on the way home from church. It's something that everyone can relate to." iB

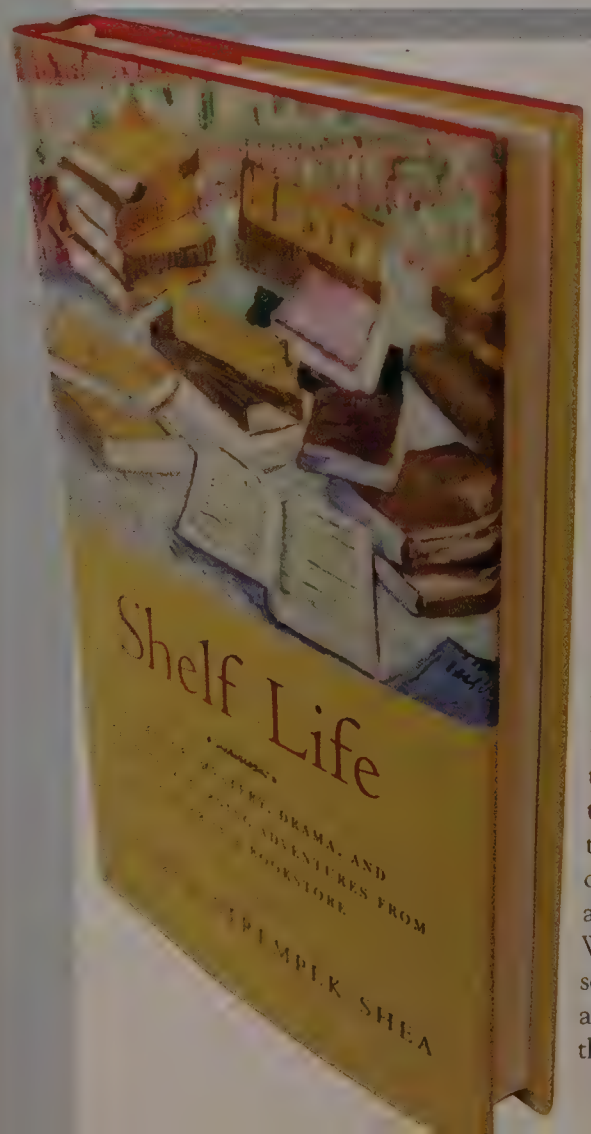
Harnett's Homeopathy & Body Care, at 47 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-491-4747), sells a deck of cards entitled "History and Uses of 50 Healing Plants," from the New York Botanical Garden. $13.95.



How sweet it is, given the blandness of pills in a bottle, that Mother Nature, artist and pharmacist, provides us with such an array of luscious and healing plants. These stiff cards, each one suitable for mini-framing, tell the tales of 50 plants: botanical, historical, medicinal, culinary, mystical. The "fairy flower," foxglove, according to legend, gave foxes the "seemingly magical ability to steal into hens' yards." Nonmagically, foxglove is used to strengthen heart contractions. Myrrh, of biblical fame, was used by the Egyptians to embalm the dead; nowadays, more cheerfully, it gives a spicy smell to perfumes. Raspberries were used to fasten loose teeth. In ayurvedic medicine, myrrh reduces swelling and alleviates pain. Latin names, such as taraxacum for dandelion (which comes from "dent to lion" or lion's tooth for its jagged leaves), zingiber for ginger and syzgium for cloves (the Chinese held cloves in the mouth to stave off bad breath when addressing the emperor) add exoticism to everyday plants and spices. The Romans warded off intoxication with parsley wreaths; cruel nettles make good soup, and marsh mallow, amazingly, is the plant ancestor of that white goo.

HELLO PINK PURSE

Anna William, at 2014 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-547-2662), offers ready- and custom-made handbags, and the store is available for booking "handbag parties." Also at 1 Merrimac St., Newburyport (978-465-2662).

Cheery, wide open and bursting with the pinks of spring and summer, this handbag store offers the custom joys of choosing and mixing your own elements to create a personalized bag. Though you can just buy a bag outright—they come in 18 styles—it's even more fun to custom-widget your own out of Anna William's sprawling array of styles and fabrics. From books/papers/diaper-holdable biggies with foldover flaps to dainty eensies for your change, each model of bag is displayed on the wall and individually named: Beacon Hill, Wellesley, Hampton (Massachusetts' own town, not the snootsville New York one), Lexington and others. Each part of the bag is a candidate for its own fabric, so the largest area might be black, while the flap or strap has another jazzy print and the zip-up part in its secret inner section sports yet another fabric. Further, there are numerous closure options—snaps, ribbons, zippers, pinchers. All these variations make for another deliciously inviting option: handbag parties for gal pals, available at both locations. The store becomes headquarters for your crew, and the organizer receives a complimentary bag of $74 value. You can bring your own food and drink and have a bag lunch.

Shelf Life* tells of writer Suzanne Strempek Shea's year working at a bookstore in Springfield, Mass.

Where do books come from? These days, the stor brings them via the Internet, apparently. But tha depersonalized mode of literary browsing only make the human world of real bookstores, especially inde pendent, family-owned shops, more precious. An it's that atmosphere that Suzanne Strempek She sought out. A novelist who'd lived through cance and written a book about her travails, she went t work at Edwards Books, where she found a world engagement in the community of readers, the know edgeable and eccentric hangers-on (one guy loved t read titles out loud and thrilled her by reading one hers) and in the owner, Janet Edwards. Shea's love Brookline Booksmith spilled over to her cozy voc tion at Edwards. At this literary watering hole, say the owner, "It really is a world begging for connec tion." Shea describes authors' readings—including he own—that, even with sometimes squirmingly sma audiences were exhausting, gratifying, quirky fu With one foot in book-writing and the other in book selling, Shea champions authors, especially local one and celebrates the excitement that radiates throug the store as flesh and book make contact.

RANI CURRIES FLAVOR

Coolidge Corner spot serves diverse Indian cuisine

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Shrimp balchow with salad garnish

To most people, Indian cuisine means, first and foremost, curries, those rich, aromatic stews with the assertive flavors and distinctive aromas of curry powder, an orange-yellow spice almost universally available in the average American grocery store. What is not generally appreciated is that curry is not a single spice and not particularly Indian in its origins. In fact, it's a blend of several spices from the four corners of the world. In its most authentic and refined form, it includes cumin, coriander, fennel, mustard and fenugreek, indigenous to the Mediterranean basin; chili peppers from Mexico; and black pepper, cardamom, turmeric, and kari leaf (sometimes by itself called "curry") from south Asia. Good Indian restaurants would no more use standard-issue, grocery store curry powder than a fine Italian restaurant would serve spaghetti and meatballs from a can.

Boston has the good fortune to be home to a significant number of Indian restaurants, both in the city and the suburbs. Rani, on Beacon Street in Brookline's Coolidge Corner, is one of the newest additions to these valued gastronomic resources, having opened at the end of last year. Its enterprising owners, Samir and Prakruti Majmudar, are veterans of the Boston dining scene and have owned and run Boston restaurants for the better part of 20 years. In contrast to many Indian restaurants, Rani is bright and airy, with an upbeat, contemporary look and feel. Small conical lights line the ochre-colored soffit beneath the high ceiling, casting a pleasant glow on the yellow walls of the large, square dining room, which is otherwise appointed in soothing earth tones. Illuminated niches in one wall display a variety of vases and other artifacts.

While Rani's menu mentions a special emphasis on the cuisine of Hyderabad, India's "Pearl City," its comprehensive bill of fare ranges across the length and breadth of this large country of geographical, climatic, cultural and linguistic diversity. For appetizers, the "Rani Platter" ($9), an assortment of hot hors d'oeuvres, all of them well executed, represents an obvious choice. The light, crispy and flaky pastry of the samosas (vegetable turnovers) encased moist, flavorful potatoes and peas, deftly seasoned with coriander and other spices that make up the heart and soul of Indian cooking. Translated on the menu as "dumplings" but really fritters, Sabzi pakora consisted of potatoes, carrots, cauliflower and chili, at once crunchy and moist. They were served with a sweet-tart plum sauce, the tartness probably contributed by tamarind, a common source of sour flavoring. Onion bhaji, the third installment of the quartet of appetizers on the platter, turned out to be onion and potato fritters seasoned with cumin and battered with chick pea flour. Rounding out the platter, the batata wada, India's answer to the potato pancake, was a plump rectangle of spiced potatoes coated with chick pea batter and fried to a golden brown, its interior moist and assertively spiced with coriander, cumin and perhaps turmeric.

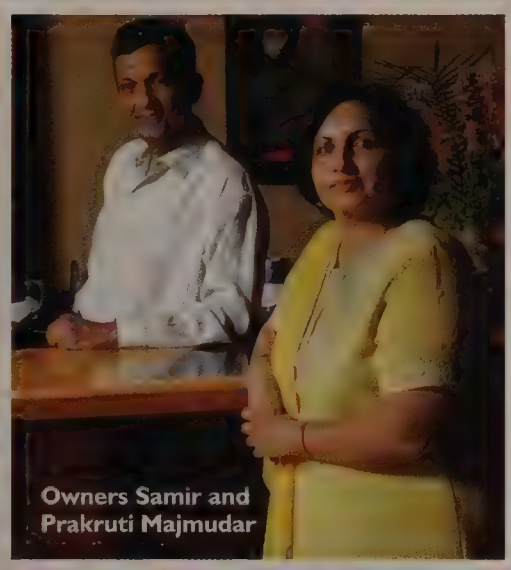
Other appetizers included the shrimp balchow ($8), four good-sized, nicely textured shrimp in a rich, complex sauce with a provocative, peppery kick. The accompanying salad garnish of tomato, lettuce, cucumbers and onions had a cooling effect. Our final appetizer, kakori kebab ($8), consisted of mini links of lamb sausage that had been marinated in cumin and other spices and roasted in a tandoor (clay oven). Excessive dryness afflicted these kebabs, as it did the other tandoori offerings, but Rani's exceptional mint chutney (more on this later) went a long way to compensate for their dryness. Rani's breads, surprisingly, failed to meet my high expectations. The peshawari naan ($3), leavened bread baked in a tandoor with raisins and cashews, appeared to skimp on those ingredients, while the puffed-up, whole-wheat poori, as spectacular as it looked—like a well-made soufflé—seemed all show and little substance.

Of Rani's main courses, I tried two from the Hyderabad side of the menu: kairi muri ($12) and hussainey lamb ($14). The first boneless shards of moist, full-flavored chicken cooked with green mango boasted an intriguing and enjoyable tart sweet flavor. The lamb had been stewed in garlic and fresh ginger, creating a remarkably robust but nuanced sauce, warm and aromatic. Besides the ginger and garlic, it may have contained a whisper of cilantro. From a selection of traditional Indian curries listed toward the end of Rani's menu, I chose chicken madras ($12), rogan josh ($14) and sali boti ($14). Of these three the rogan josh—described as a classic curry from Kashmir, in the northwest of the Indian subcontinent—was dry and bland. Fortunately, these two adjectives were categorically inapplicable to the other two curries. The chicken madras seasoned with chilies and mustard seed featured coconut as its most prominent ingredient, which gave it a mellow, seductive sweetness that masked its heat—a deception that became apparent several bites in. It turned out to be one of the more memorable of Rani's dishes. Sali boti, described as sour and sweet lamb curry, got those flavors largely from apricots, a perfect foil for the gamy meat.



Finally among main courses, the tandoori mixed grill ($19) enabled me to sample almost the entire tandoori repertoire at Rani, from lamb to chicken to shrimp. The shrimp stood out, crunchy in texture and wonderfully moist, with robust, intriguing spiced overtones. The chicken, on the other hand, was irredeemably dry, a failing nared by both the cut up chicken served n the bone and the boneless pieces of nicken kurchan. The flesh of the tandoori nicken took on hues ranging from yellow pink from the predominant spices—yelw from turmeric (a chief ingredient of rry powder), and pink, I surmised, from e cumin. The tandoori-cooked lamb mirred the dryness of the chicken. Tandoori asting is supposed to result in meat that s been seared to a hard crust on the outde while remaining moist and tender ithin. Rani's tandoori texture failings may ave resulted from inadequate coating with arinade before or in the course of cookg. In any event, the dryness of the tanori meats was addressed by liberal spoonls of Rani's spectacular mint chutney. his refreshing condiment, a felicitous end of mango, mint, cilantro and yogurt, ould be a staple in any home.

After the heat of many of Rani's main urses, the soothing sweetness of kheer, dian rice pudding flavored with carmom ($4), brought relief, as did a ango lassi ($3.50), a refreshing yogurt ilkshake. Rani offers a decent selection of wines to accompany its food, including two bargain-priced house wines from Australia bearing the label "Peace"—one a reasonably balanced chardonnay and the other a blend of traditional Rhone grapes. Many, of course, prefer beer as the accompaniment for Indian cuisine, and Rani offers a selection of domestic and Indian brews.

I visited Rani twice, once early in the week, when desultory service mirrored a sparsely populated dining room, and once in the middle of the week, when almost every table was filled and Rani's service staff rose to the challenge of handling the hungry throng. In fact, the efficiency and attentiveness of our waiters on that visit, on which I was accompanied by four colleagues to better enable us to sample a large number of dishes, made me suspect that our journalistic mission had been discovered. Still, careful observation of the rest of the dining room, where a consistent level of satisfaction and enjoyment prevailed, suggested that other parties received comparable attention and good service. iB

Convention Detention

Grotto hunkers down...Getting a big pizza the action in the Berkshires

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

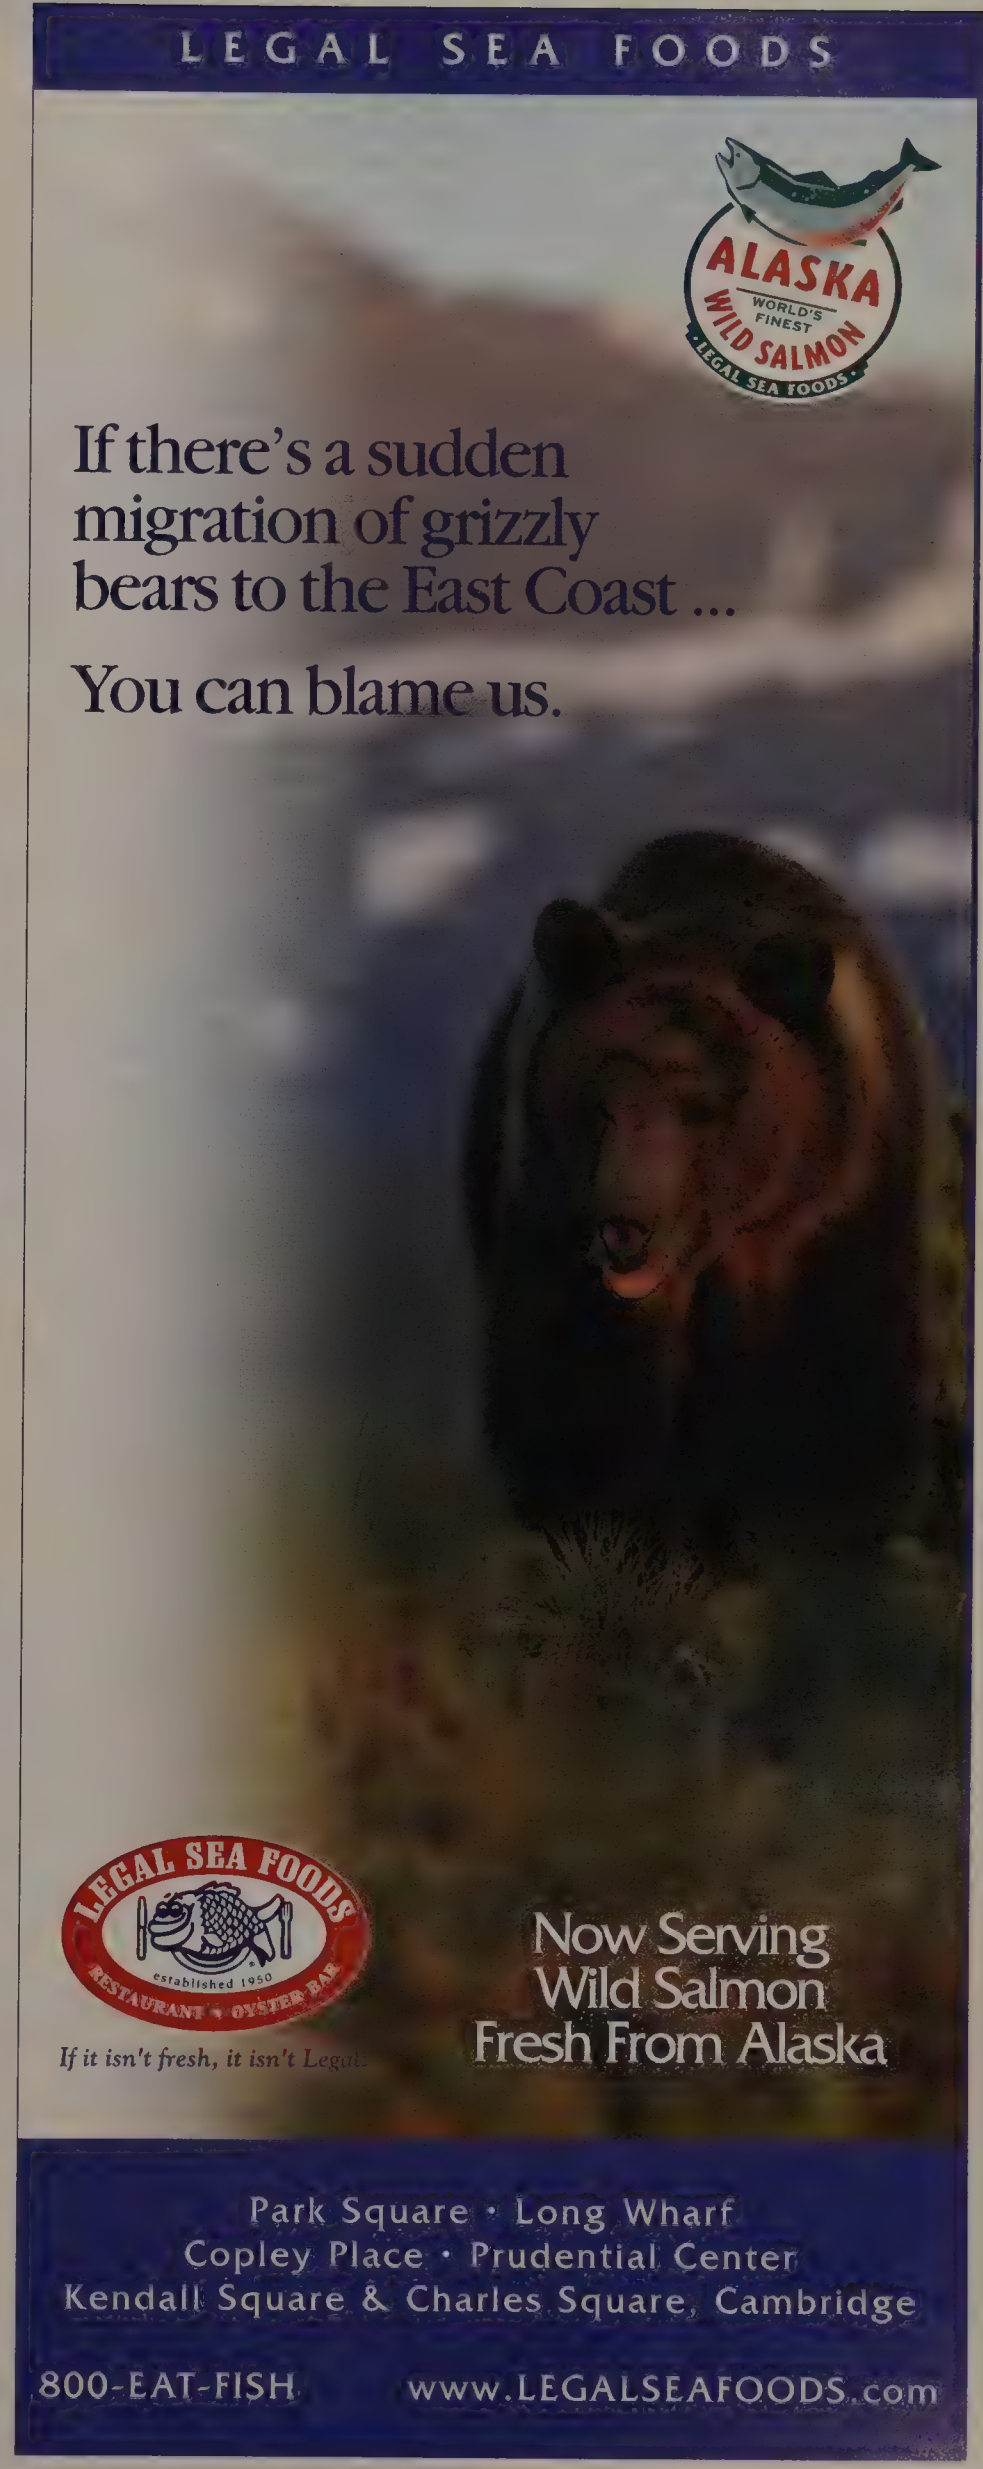
If the prospect of being overrun by conventioneers in late July makes you want to hide out in a cave, we have a better suggestion: Reserve a seat at Grotto on Beacon Hill, where owner/chef Scott Herritt will set up a "community table" so folks tuck in the city can "share views, blues, and news," as well as a four-course, prix-fixe dinner for $20.04.

Actually, Herritt will be offering the same deal—choice of appetizer, a salad, choice of entrée, choice of dessert—during the week preceding the convention too. By then, he'll be celebrating Grotto's first birthday ("time flies when you're cooking and having fun," he says). And perhaps he'll be nominated for president of the Positive Attitude Party.

Grotto chef/owner Scott Herritt

Monster in a box: When chefs Billy Boudreau and Tom Tenuta left bustling Boston for the bucolic Berkshires, each expected the quiet comforts of the countryside. Tenuta, chef/owner of the former Cena, had recently married Loretta Huguez, formerly of El Pelon Taqueria, and they wanted more space in which to raise a family. Boudreau,who'd been a pastry chef at Seasons at the Bostonian and more recently chef at 02129 in Charlestown, rented a rustic antique farmhouse and planned to raise chicken. As business partners, the two men decided to open a simple pizzeria in West Stockbridge.

It seemed simple, to start. A local woodworker crafted an impressive table. A neighborhood artisan fashioned a striking marble bar. Boudreau painted the main dining room of The Village Oven in tones of soft avocado and rich cream. Suddenly, as soon as I put the eagle on top of the cappuccino maker," he says, he was struck with the premonition that their grasp might exceed their reach.



Opening day brought a stampede of diners, "75 percent more than we'd expected," says Boudreau. "Forty-five minutes before we opened, people were calling on the phone, ordering pizza." The next day, a patron patiently waited an hour and a half for his pizza. Boudreau, grappling with sudden, overwhelming popularity, told the man the pizza was on the house. But no—such was the frenzy of devotion inspired by this pizza that the man insisted on paying.

Boudreau and Tenuta were stunned. "All of a sudden, we're pizza chic," says Boudreau. On the third day, they took a brief time-out to increase their staff fourfold—from five to 20—and braced themselves to accommodate the crowds. "Maybe we'll get an unlisted phone number, a little peephole and a password," jokes Boudreau. So much for the simple life. (In case you're wondering, yes, the pizza is that good.)

Et cetera: In the Land of Todd, Jenny Cates has been named the new executive chef at Bonfire, while former Bonfire executive chef Chris Frothingham is now executive chef at Kingfish Hall. Big fish: Legal Sea Foods' newly appointed chief operating officer is Darryl "Chip" Wade, who has apparently played key roles both in the aggressive growth of Smokey Bones BBQ restaurants and the revitalization of the Olive Garden chain. As long as they keep him out of the kitchen. iB

Music: Musical Melodrama

On his first album, Bobby Conn claimed he was the Antichrist. He swore that when the millennium rolled around, Armageddon would destroy civilization as we know it, and he'd be anointed King of the World. Or something like that. In any case, nothing he predicted actually happened. Fortunately, he has his music to fall back on, which is good news for lovers of great rock. Schooled in the fine arts of David Bowie's 1970s glam-rock, Burt Bacharach's 1960s love-pop and James Brown's timeless tactics of stage domination, Conn has put together a live show that's not to be missed. His onstage partner (and offstage wife) Monica Bou Bou plays a mean rock violin, adding extra melodrama and emphatic stabs of poignancy to Conn's over-the-top vocals. The songs themselves are anthemic mini-operas ranging from stories of drug-addled love and loss to self-championing epics with hooks and choruses that will linger in your ears like a Q-tip made of hugs. Trans Am and the Frequency join him on the bill when he plays downstairs at the Middle East. 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-492-9181). $12.

The Wah Lum Kung Fu Academy

In this town, boat racing is synonymous with the Head of the Charles Regatta, which each October fills the riverbanks with nearly 300,000 spectators and 7,000 athletes. Now approaching its 40th year, the HOCR is certainly Boston's biggest boating event, but in terms of cultural appeal, the Hong Kong Dragon Boat Festival packs more punch. Typically held on the fifth day of the fifth moon of the lunar calendar (which falls between late May and mid June), the dragon boat race is a Chinese tradition that dates back nearly 2,300 years and originally honored the ancient poet/patriot Qu Yuan, who drowned himself in the Mi Lo River after China was invaded in 278 B.C. To ward off evil spirits, the boats were embellished with brightly colored, evil spirit–repelling dragon heads at the prow and tails at the stern. The decorations remain a part of the race today. Some 20,000 spectators will watch 35 teams compete, followed by a drumming performance by the Boston Chinese Dulcimer Ensemble, and a dragon dance and martial arts demonstration by the Wah Lum Kung Fu Academy. Arts and crafts by the Greater Boston Chinese Cultural Association will be on display, and tons of Asian food vendors will be on hand. 9 am-5 pm, Charles River banks between JFK Street and the Western Avenue Bridge, Cambridge (617-426-6500, ext. 778). www.bostondragonboat.org.

Steven Epp of Theatre de la Jeune Leune

Performing Arts: Hard Times

When Moliere's famous play The Miser premiered in 1668 at the Palais-Royal in Paris, it was a flop. But in the 350 some-odd years since the dismal debut, Molière's tale of a parsimonious patriarch has become a playhouse favorite worldwide, and it's the last show of the American Repertory Theatre's current season. For this tragicomedy, the ART joins forces with the Minneapolis-based theatrical company Theatre de la Jeune Lune, known for its lively, vaudevillian interpretations of classical works. Jeune Lune's co–artistic director Steven Epp stars as Harpagon, the greedy miser whose stinginess comes back to haunt him. David Ball, who has written for Jeune Lune for 25 years, adapted the play for modern audiences, and Dominique Serrand, the theater's co-founder and co–artistic director, directs. Loeb Drama Center, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-547-8300). $35-$69.

CityScope: Around the Block

Memorial Day has come and gone, and summer is unofficially under way. From now until September, the city will be decidedly underpopulated Friday through Sunday nights. So if you typically flee to the beach come summer weekends you'll need to get your dose of urban eating-drinking-partying on weeknights. Luckily the next two weeks host two mid-week block parties that tie all three social activities together. On June 9, Brookline restaurant the Fireplace hosts the first annual Washington Square Block Party to benefit the Brookline Fire Department. The restaurant's parking lot is transformed into a party zone with grilled foods, summer cocktails, games, a raffle and auction (we hear a Ray Bourque jersey and Eric Clapton tickets, among other goodies, are up for grabs) and tunes by merengue/Latin band Grupo Fantasia. Attendees are invited to mix and mingle with guests (who'll include former Red Sox greats Luis Tiant and Rick Miller) until the party moves inside and continues to the sounds of reggae group Irie Roots. Then, on June 17, perennial favorite Jose McIntyre's 11th annual Block Party takes over Central Street. Every year, hundreds of nine-to-fivers show up ready to blow off steam at the party sponsored by Jose Mac's, Budweiser, Star 93.7 and WEEI 850-AM. The Adam Ezra Group, Me & Julio and DJ Dan McCarthy provide musical entertainment, and a portion of the proceeds benefits cystic fibrosis research. The Fireplace, 6:30 pm, $20, 1634 Beacon St., Brookline (617-975-1900); Jose McIntyre's, 5 pm, $5, 160 Milk St., Boston (617-451-9460).

CityScope: Fashion Statement

In the 2001 film Zoolander, Ben Stiller's brainwashed fashion model struts down the catwalk flashing his trademark "magnum" look and showing off a line of "trash fashion" called Derelicte, which is anything but haute couture. Boston's first fashion show featuring clothes designed from trash—excuse us, recycled materials—won't have any *Zoolander*ish brainwashing or humorous assassination attempts, but it promises to be entertaining nonetheless. During the show, artists and designers present their clothes and accessories—some of which incorporate oddities like old socks, rubber inner tubes and household items. The event isn't all fun and games, however. The artists hope to enlighten as well as entertain, raising awareness of fashion industry–related environmental concerns. The night continues with an after-party featuring several dance performances. It all takes place at Andrew Square Studio, a new South Boston art space in a former warehouse. 5 Wadleigh Place, Boston (617-288-3925). 6:30 pm. www.trashfashions.com. $10.

Heroes fight the system in Baadasssss! and The Twilight Samurai.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

In the movies, it's not how loud you yell, but how well you yell. That's the lesson to take away from The Twilight Samurai and Baadasssss! Both films are about men trapped in the lower rungs of a class system, but while Baadasssss!—Mario Van Peebles' docudrama about dad Melvin's making of the 1971 breakthrough black/indie movie Sweet Sweetback's Baadasssss Song—is more outwardly brazen, it's not as effective as veteran Japanese director Yoji Yamada's quieter, yet more surprising import.

I've never seen a samurai movie that has less mystique and more intimacy than The Twilight Samurai. That title takes on a few different meanings. The most significant are the 1860s setting—the time when the era of warlords and their samurai retinues was coming to an end in Japan—and the fact that protagonist Seibei (Hiroyuki Sanada) picks up the mocking nickname of "Twilight" because that's the time of day when his co-workers go out carousing and he dutifully goes home to take care of his two young daughters.

Seibei is a member of the samurai class, but his "day job" isn't as a warrior. He's a civil servant in his clan's warehouse, a widower more devoted to his kids than to getting ahead. But he soon gets caught up in the politics of class after he stands up for the honor of Tomoe (Rie Miyazawa), the childhood friend he's always loved. He ends up in a duel with her drunken ex-husband and, refusing to use a sword, KOs his foe with a stick.

Seibei, who tells Tomoe's brother he's too lowly a samurai to be worthy of marrying her (as she wishes), gets further sucked into politics after his clan's lord dies and a power struggle breaks out to fill the void. Now respected as a fighter, Seibei is ordered to kill Yogo (Min Tanaka), a warrior loyal to a master who lost the power struggle.

Yogo was ordered to commit suicide and has refused. When reluctant Seibei confronts him, Yogo engages him in a lengthy, heartfelt conversation about duty and honor. It's an amazing scene in which it's nearly impossible to decide who's playing possum with whom: Is it Yogo, who says they're just pawns in others' battles, or Seibei, who acts humble and respectful in the warrior's presence? When the swords come out, the fight is refreshingly real and a nice change from Kill Bill flash or Last Samurai showboating. Like many samurai movies, The Twilight Samurai recalls a Hollywood western, but this time it's not action-filled westerns, but psychological ones like Shane or Unforgiven. It's a very distinctive movie.

Like The Twilight Samurai, Baadasssss! takes place at a crossroads in history, yet it's disappointingly indistinctive. The time is circa 1970, when the black power movement is on the rise and the Hollywood studios are at a low point. Melvin Van Peebles (played by son Mario) is one of the very few American black filmmakers around, but he can't get any studio to back his movie about a black stud who becomes an unrepentant, police-fighting outlaw.

So Melvin makes Sweet Sweetback's Baadasssss Song independently, on his own terms and mostly with his own money. Then, against all odds, it becomes a smash that singlehandedly shows Hollywood the black audience it always ignored (the blaxploitation cycle of movies would soon follow). Mario has dad Melvin's cigar-chomping bluster down pat, but what ensues is a pretty standard story of indie-filmmaking hardship. What indie-film success story didn't struggle to make ends meet, keep on schedule, find distribution and get noticed? Mario tries to add twists to the story—some psychedelic touches, a nay-saying alter ego for Melvin who appears from time to time, and a subplot about Melvin's relationship with young Mario (Khleo Thomas)—but Baadasssss! never really finds an interesting cinematic perspective on its events (it was apparently financed by Showtime, and it feels like a TV movie).

In other words, there's no reason anyone who hasn't seen Melvin Van Peebles' rough-hewn and revolutionary Sweet Sweetback's Baadasssss Song or Classified X (his great rant about Hollywood's onscreen treatment of blacks, from which Baadasssss! often cribs ideas) should see Baadasssss! before heading to those primary sources. Baadasssss! is a competent enough slice of movie and social history, but it's no substitute for the real thing. iB

In The Twilight Samurai, Hiroyuki Sanada plays a civil servant and devoted father in 1860s Japan.

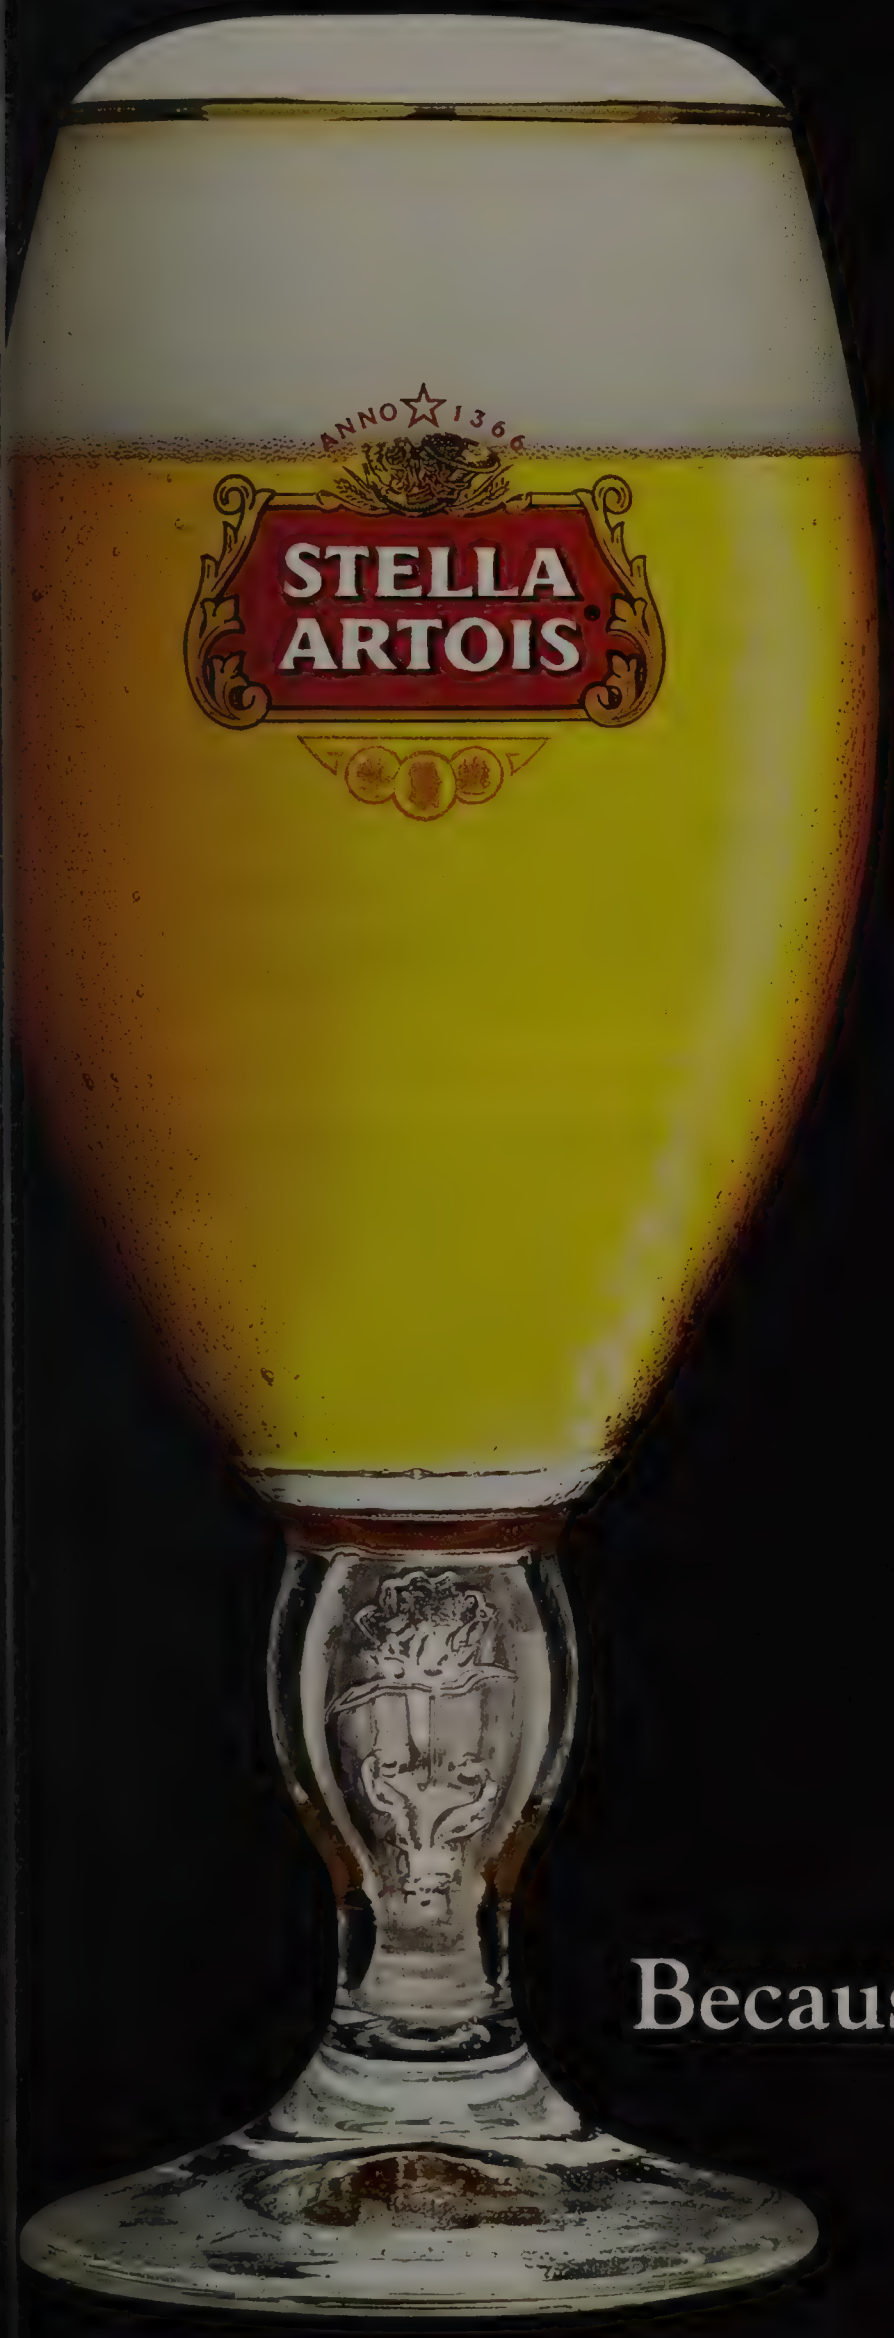
Coffee and Cigarettes ★★★
The short films in Jim Jarmusch's amusing collection, made in dribs and drabs over the last 18 years, all involve characters sitting around indulging in its namesake objects. The repeatedly celebrates pairs of things that go well together, whether it's those characters, coffee and smokes, black and white twins, Abbott and Costello or, to reference one of the soundtrack's songs, crimson and clover. There's Steven Wright and Roberto Benigni's absurd opener, Tom Waits and Iggy Pop trying to out-"outlaw" each other, Joie and Cinque Lee having their ears bent by a Memphis waiter (Steve Buscemi) with an oddball Elvis theory, and health nuts GZA and RZA (from Wu Tang Clan) coming upon caffeine nut Bill Murray, among others. The movie unfolds in cool surroundings and with cool music from the Pharaohs and the Stooges to Funkadelic. Its world is a nice place to be and, unlike most movies, it celebrates stripped-down realism and individual self-expression. (At Coolidge Corner and Harvard Square.)



The Day After Tomorrow ★½
Wait a second. Isn't this big-budget, fake-danger spectacle the sort of movie that was no longer necessary and just too plain crass to produce following Sept. 11? I guess not. This coldly efficient disaster movie about global warming whittling at the polar ice caps, throwing the climate out-of whack and launching a new ice age is full of cheesy subplots, clunky dialogue and the supremely stupid plot of scientist Dennis Quaid walking from Philly to Manhattan in a 15-foot-of-snow, sub-sub-zero-temperature, worst-in-10,000-years storm to rescue teen son Jake Gyllenhaal. (Will someone please let him play an adult already?) (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind ★★
The latest mindbender written by Charlie Kaufman (Being John Malkovich, Human Nature, Adaptation) is, as usual, like an M.C. Escher drawing in which you can't tell always tell which direction things are headed in, but you put your faith in the hope that Kaufman will still get his characters to an interesting place. This time, in a story about a couple (Jim Carrey, Kate Winslet) who've had their memories wiped of a fizzled relationship but try to rekindle their romantic spark, that faith fails to pay off. Despite the appealing chemistry between the stars, Kaufman bats around interesting ideas about the struggle between science and human urges, but the ride isn't nearly as involving, amusing, layered or cohesive as the metaphysical journeys in Malkovich or Adaptation. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Good Bye Lenin! ★★½
An East German woman goes into a coma just before the Berlin Wall falls, and when she has to lead a stress-free life after she comes to, her son goes to great lengths to make sure she never learns that her Communist country doesn't exist anymore. This great premise yields some amusing moments, but also some disappointing ones. Unlike in Billy Wilder's brilliant One, Two, Three (which covered similar territory after the wall went up), the comedy here never quite hits high gear because the story tempers the humor with shades of drama. But the characters' family drama never becomes as memorable as the premise. (At Kendall Square.)

The Hebrew Hammer ★★★
Writer-director Jonathan Kesselman skewers blaxploitation movies, dominant Gentile culture and, of course, Jews in this very funny spoof. Decked-out private eye Mordechai Jefferson Carver (Adam Goldberg) drives a 1970s Caddy, complete with fuzzy dreidls hanging from the rear-view mirror, traverses mean streets to soul protest songs and bonds with the Kwanzaa Liberation Front. He also fights to stop Santa's evil son (Andy Dick) from wiping out Hanukkah. The Hammer takes on more mundane foes, too, like the control freaks at the Jewish Justice League, neo-Nazis (he orders "Manischewitz, straight up!" before cleaning house at a skinhead bar), Jewish women (when one begs him to talk dirty, he sweet-talks about getting a steady job and having kids who go to Stanford) and his own doting mom (Nora Dunn). Put this on a double feature with Bad Santa. (At the Coolidge, June 16.)

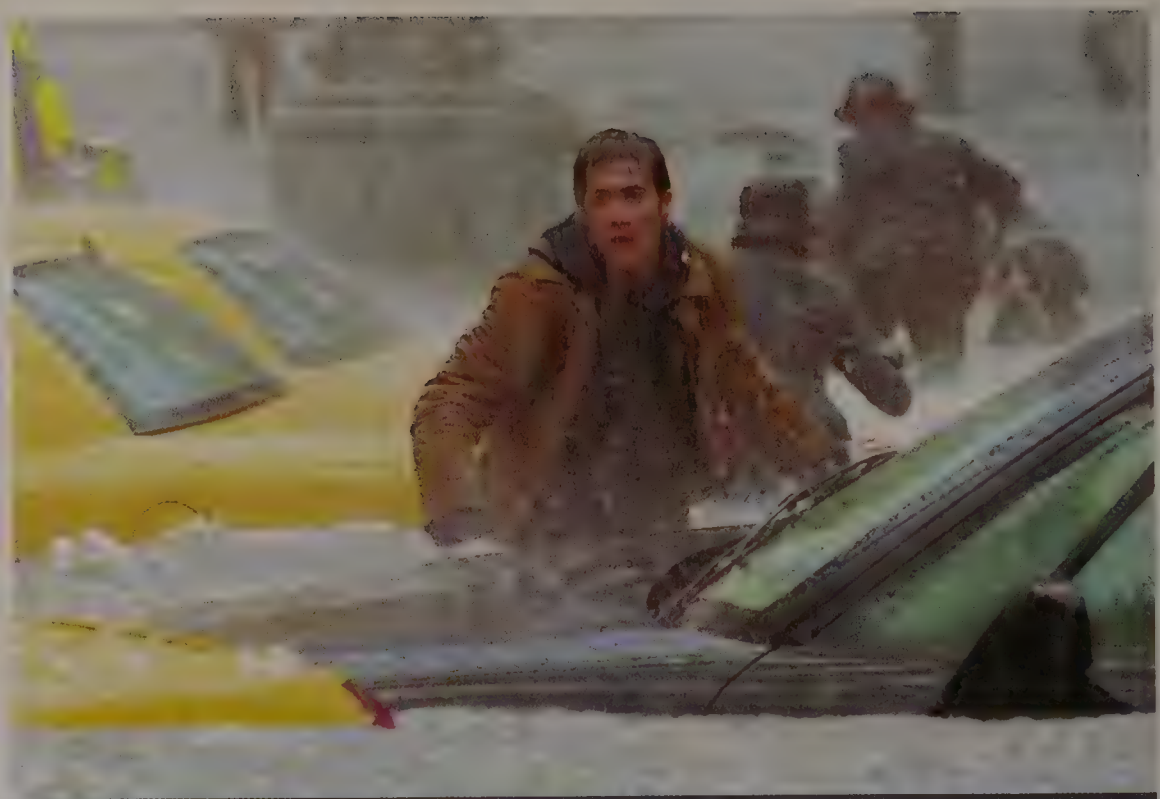
Kill Bill Vol. 2 ★★
It used to be fun when Quentin Tarantino put all his pop-culture influences in a blender and spit them back out. What happened? Tarantino was one of the first American directors inspired by Hong Kong 1980s action heyday, but since his Reservoir Dogs

Because every drop is precious.

©2004 Imported by Labatt USA, Norwalk, CT

movies have mined the same sources. friction was never as self-conscious as the half of Kill Bill (or its predecessor, released last fall). Tarantino doesn't so much blend influences here as simply ape them one at a time: Sergio Leone close-ups and spaghetti western music in one of its chapters; grainy film, Chinese dialogue and a king fu homage in the other. At least Vol. 2 has Michael Madsen, the only star here who seems genuinely dangerous and doesn't come off like a mere actor playing bad-ass. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Mean Girls ★★
With a comic tone pitched somewhere between Heathers and Clueless, writer and co-star Tina (Saturday Night Live) Fey's comedy comes off like a watered-down version of both—not as savage as the former nor as stylized as the latter. Perhaps the problem was shoehorning the story to appeal to the preteen audience of star Lindsay Lohan. She plays a 16-year-old who's been living in Africa with her zoologist parents and is now entering a conventional high school for the first time. She gets taken under the wing of the school's popular girls and soon becomes consumed by the vain, territorial teen princesses' wicked ways. While respectable (and respectful of its audience), Fey's anti-gossip, pro-sisterhood tale is long-winded and not all that funny. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)



Saved! ★★
You'll find no argument from me about this comedy's message, as it pokes fun at the repression and hypocrisy of religious fundamentalism. And the cast, playing students at American Eagle Christian High School, includes Jena Malone, Patrick Fugit and even Macauley Culkin and Mandy Moore doing some of their best work (love the end-credits duet of the Beach Boys' "God Only Knows" by Moore and co-producer Michael Stipe). But director and co-writer Brian Dannelly has made such a simplistic and smug movie that it's really only preaching to the converted, and you get the feeling he thinks his movie is much more outrageous than it really is. The film is only slightly less self-righteous than those it mocks. Check out the documentary Hell House, about the scare tactics of a Dallas Pentecostal haunted house, for the real thing.

Soul Plane ★
This comedy built around the first African-American airline is about 15 minutes of material stretched to 85. And that 15 minutes ain't too good. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Still, We Believe: The Boston Red Sox Movie ★★★
It's good to see the Red Sox get some attention—you hardly hear anything about those guys these days. Surprisingly, this documentary about the Sox' 2003 season manages not to be redundant, because it focuses on eight different fans, most of whom are pretty colorful. My favorites are Brockton realist Jermaine, inseparable East Boston diehards Erin and Jessamy and, last but not least, Watertown pessimist "Angry Bill." His mood swings (over the course of a game, an inning or even an at-bat) are priceless and are something with which every Sox fan can commiserate. There's a lot of pain going on, especially come Game Seven against the Yankees, but this is a pleasure to watch. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Super Size Me ★★★
See Morgan. See Morgan eat only at McDonald's for 30 days. See Morgan's weight balloon, his cholesterol shoot up and his liver start to break down. Director Morgan Spurlock, sort of a lighter (and lighter-touch) Michael Moore, serves up his McBinge very amusingly, in order to expose the poison of American fast food. He plays the role of guinea pig with such a commitment and sense of humor that the rather depressing message of Super Size Me goes down easier. Whether Spurlock intended it or not, the larger picture of this country that his movie paints is a frightening one of total decadence, self-indulgence and slavishness to profit and instant gratification, at the expense of common sense and humanity. (At Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Troy ★★½
Sword-and-sandals epics like this Trojan War movie are always a little cheesy, and this one is no different. The arch dialogue and "hey, look at these expensive sets!" feeling are to be expected, as are the CGI hordes of battlers. But not the fact that half the action with the star (Brad Pitt as warrior extraordinaire Achilles) is just plain goofy. Yet Wolfgang Petersen's movie can impress, especially in the showdown between Achilles and Eric Bana's Hector. That crucial scene is well shot and imaginatively scored, and unlike most fight scenes these days, it's not confusing. Meanwhile, Brian Cox brings some Yosemite Sam rootin'-tootin' fire to Jake Gyllenhaal tries in vain to get a cab out of town in The Day After Tomorrow.

Agamemnon—the Greek king who finds a convenient excuse to stage an invasion (doesn't that sound familiar?)—and Peter O'Toole adds class as Trojan king Priam. But listless German actress Diane Kruger as Helen, the face that launched a thousand ships? Not likely. (At Loews Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Van Helsing ★
Oh, the lack of humanity. Director Stephen Sommers, the hack behind the Mummy movies, gives us more special-effects-heavy emptiness. Only this one is more effects-heavy and more empty. With Hugh Jackman as the title character—merely the latest gimmicky spectacle-movie evil-fighter to come down the multiplex pike—and cohort Kate Beckinsale dolled up like a hooker at the Country Music Awards, this is a bloody drag. Sommers' main priority seems to be to take the human element out of moviemaking; he even turns Dr. Jekyll's pal Mr. Hyde into a Hulk-like CGI effect. His only talent is knowing the effects whizzes' phone numbers. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Angelique Kidjo follows her heart along the branches of African music

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Angelique Kidjo has completed a trilogy that won't gain the fame and fortune of The Lord of the Rings but draws its own great personal and historical path across middle Earth.

Her CD trilogy explores the connection between the music of her native Africa and three New World regions that straddle the Equator: the United States, Brazil and the Caribbean.

Kidjo's new CD completes a trilogy that explores Africa's musical influence.

"I wanted for so long to do my trilogy that nothing would stop me," says the Afro-pop singer, whose project involved two record labels and took several years and countries to complete. "It has been a dream, and a kind of promise that I made to myself as a child, to do everything I can in my possibility, to bring about understanding among human beings, because we're just still not quite there yet."

The connection between the countries is their former role as stops on the African slavery routes. "One thing that came out of slavery is the gift of music to the world," Kidjo says. "That's the legacy that [the slaves] left us, because music helped them keep the dignity of human beings, helped them heal and give us a message of hope and forgiveness and getting together."

On 1998's Oremi, Kidjo put her spin on R&B ballads and soul-funk—and offered a textural hip-hop take on Jimi Hendrix's "Voodoo Child (Slight Return)." On 2002's Black Ivory Soul, Kidjo dug into musical links between her West African birthplace of Benin and the Brazilian region of Bahia. And on the new Oyaya! (which means "joy" in the African language Yoruba), she taps into musical styles from Puerto Rico, Haiti, the Dominican Republic, Trinidad, Jamaica and, especially, Cuba.

"Cuba was the last place I'd been to in the process of doing this album," Kidjo says from a tour stop in Germany. "The first thing that struck me was the feeling of being spied on. I left my country because of the Communist regime, the lack of freedom, and everybody always being on your case. You never know who's going to give you up. And that was the only thing that I hated [about Cuba]. When it came to music, I found so much creativity."

Kidjo also fostered creativity when she brought her songs into the studio with producer Steve Berlin (Los Lobos) and co-producer/arranger Alberto Salas, who assembled an empathetic team of Latin and African musicians.

Most everything (except for the xylophone-like balafon) was recorded live, and the results crackle with vivid, lively performances that make Oyaya! the highpoint of Kidjo's trilogy.

"It was a lot of fun, a lot of good, positive energy," says the singer, who generally prefers the stage to the studio. She performs June 25 at Avalon (with Afro-pop upstart Femi Kuti) and June 26 at Pearl Street in Northampton, fronting a quartet that sports guitar, bass, piano and percussion.

Kidjo was once criticized by some for mixing African music with Western forms such as techno-funk. Has acceptance grown for her genre-blending style?

"It has always been difficult for people to get into that, because when you come from Africa, you have to fit into some category of music, and I've never fit into any those," she says. "I like to be free and do what I like. Music is the only language we speak equally, and that music is out there for everybody, and no one has the right to pin you down because you come from a different country or culture."

For starters, Kidjo steamrolls over any language barriers, singing primarily in her native Fon—in addition to Mina, Yoruba, French and English—on Oyaya! "You can listen to music in any language and feel the emotion," says Kidjo, whose past collaborators have included Western singers Dave Matthews and Cassandra Wilson as well as instrumentalists Carlos Santana and Branford Marsalis. "That is universal."

Although the new CD seamlessly fuses those languages with Latin styles including salsa, calypso and ska, Kidjo wanted to include Spanish. But she couldn't find a compatible lyricist to work with. "It had to have the same truth as my own language," she says. "If it goes back to Africa, where they don't speak English or Spanish, they have to groove on it too."

Kidjo is a star in her homeland, where girls cut and bleach their hair to emulate her. When she was growing up in the '70s, however, being a female singer was discouraged

"It was not accepted at all, but I was lucky enough to have the parents I had," says Kidjo, whose father promoted her first show at age 17, and whose mother formed Benin's first theater group. "She always told me, 'You gotta feel it in your heart. If there's a doubt any time, don't do it.'" iB

Rooney Tunes

Retro rockers Rooney are shakin' things up with their vintage-venerating pop

Rooney performs at Axis June 15 with openers Straylight Run and Ozma.

Pro-Tooled vocals dominate the airwaves. Concerts are heavier on costume than chord changes. And L.A.-based rockers Rooney, whose melodic, tightly crafted songs are more Beatles than Britney, have had about enough of the formulaic pop that makes up most of the modern musical mainstream.

"There's no room for other types of music," singer/guitarist Robert Carmine laments over the phone. "There isn't enough space for rock and roll bands!"

It's not that Rooney is anti-mainstream—after all, the four-year old band performed its single "I'm Shakin'" on a recent episode of the Fox teen drama The O.C. Rather, Rooney wishes it were easier for bands that don't fit the typical top-40 formula to do what Carmine calls "the coolest thing": bring their music to the masses.

Instead of compromising their sound in hopes of reaching a wider audience, Rooney took to the road with artists like Weezer and Pete Yorn, touring relentlessly behind their eponymous and unabashedly retro-rocking 2003 debut CD.

By playing venues ranging from small London clubs to California's 100,000-capacity Rose Bowl, Rooney—whose five members' combined ages barely top 100—broadened their fan base and also proved themselves as musicians. "Our record has to be as good as all those other bands'," says Carmine. "You don't get a pat on the back for being 19 and having a record out."

Soon Rooney will have two records out: After wrapping up their current "Spit and Sweat" tour in mid-July, Rooney will enter an L.A. studio to record their sophomore album, due out this winter. Fans at the band's Axis show will get an early preview: "The best thing to do before you make a record is play the songs a lot," says Carmine, who estimates that half the set will be fresh material.

The band's reverence for 1950s and '60s rock—music from that era was the "coolest and most original," Carmine says—will continue to inform its sound. But what happens when Rooney's respect for rock icons comes into conflict with their disdain for commerce-driven musicians? (Their song "Popstars" lambastes musicians who focus on cash over craft.) In the case of a certain '60s rock pioneer turned Victoria's Secret pitchman, reverence wins out by a mile. "At this point, Bob Dylan could be in a Spice Girls video and still be incredible," Carmine laughs.

Axis, 13 Lansdowne Street, Boston (617-262-2437). June 15, 8 pm. $15. All ages.

improper impersonals

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity.) Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

RECENT CORRESPONDENCE FOLLOWS.

To the Angry, Angry Woman on the BU Bridge

Shout and point and gun your engine all you want and I still won't ride on the sidewalk; that's for pedestrians. I'd rather bother you and your car than Yuppie Mom with the two-seater stroller because, honestly, driving falls even higher than procreating on my list of social ills. Take out your (apparently) bad hair day on someone else.

To #29 in Purple, #1 in My Heart

While we have always been close and shared a special bond, that bond never crossed the threshold I wanted it to. Until New Year's Eve that is. Often in college, various circumstances would eat away at any chance for our friendship to develop into something more. But not on this night. What started as another memorable shared celebration concluded with unbridled passion as years of pent up energy spilled out. The unfortunate and unintended consequence of that wonderful evening is that we are both a little nicked up and have begun to drift a bit. Well, let's try to get things back on track. Let's try to rediscover the feelings that wrought our New Year's consummation. Sincerely,

—Your Neighborly Friend and Companion

Can I Borrow Your Library Card?

I saw you in the North End Library on the afternoon of June 1 at around 3 pm. You were wearing a gray sweatshirt and khaki shorts. I thought you were cute, and I'm the attractive female who was wearing the black leather jacket. We caught each other's eye a couple of times. If you remember this, e-mail me, and maybe we can get together sometime.

—bass04us@yahoo.com

To The Faneuil Hall Police Officer

To the Boston police officer who insisted I move my friend's car: It was nearly 2 am and my friend jumped out of the running vehicle to use an ATM somewhere on a dark side street near Faneuil Hall. My roommate and I waited in all our drunken glory in the car for him to return. You came by asking me to move the car. With four Bacardi and Diets and three vodka shots duking it out in my stomach, I replied, "I can't officer; I'm too drunk to drive." But you again demanded that I move the car. As my friend and I continued to protest that I was too inebriated to drive the car, you became more and more insistent. By this point you actually showed genuine confidence in my ability to move the car drunk by saying, "You can at least move it a couple of streets, can't you?" Thanks to your support and coaching, I somehow managed to move the car satisfactorily and you continued on your way. Thank you, officer. Your confidence in my driving ability while drunk is very touching. It is that confidence in your constituents that will make this city a better place.

THE IMPROPER IMPERSONALS POETRY CORNER

Every so often our Impersonals readers feel moved to recognize that special someone or something in their lives with a bit of poetry. Normally, we drop these warm, fuzzy missives into a dusty file at the back of our rustiest filing cabinet. But for one time only, we're printing a sample of this heartfelt googly-goo. In the future, why not buy a Hallmark card? We tell you this out of love, because you're our wittle-bitty snooker-doodle reader-weedums. And now, on with the poetry.

—The Improper Impersonals

To My Frankie Beans

Roses are red
Violets are blue
You're old enough to be my dad
But I really like you
We met at a bar
Just a few months ago
A chick threw a drink in our face
So you took me back to your place
We're truly an odd couple
But as you can see
We're two banana heads
That are just meant to be
You're turning 41
Let's get loaded and have fun
Happy birthday to you
Be nice and you'll probably get some

—Daddy's Little Girl Reese

You So Fly

You're the illest and the realest...deep and very sweet. Can't believe someone like you I was able to meet. Better yet be with, and I appreciate the time we spend, cuz I can be me freely without the need to pretend. You're unlike any other, the best of the best. Sure you're far from perfect, but far better than the rest. I'm sure you know this and must hear it all the time. On a scale of one to ten, you're way past the dime. Being who you are, this has to be expected; and know that you're admired and very well respected. I can go on and on like a never-ending song, talking about how great you are, but then this rhyme would be too long. I just wanted to express what you mean to me, though just words on a page, it's meant genuinely.

—MC Wacky-Wack

Ode to Boston

My love for Boston is deep within my aching heart, for I have to move to a place with no snow, no warm-hearted people. But the love for my family far exceeds the love for Boston

—EM

Marcus

In a fast food restaurant
We met by chance
I saw you walk by
My heart did a little dance
I gave you my phone number
Hoping you would call me
Only a couple hours later
That call came to be
We talked and got to know
Things about each other
After a lengthy conversation
We decided to hang out with one another
The trips to the beach
Were we walked hand in hand
Long drives along the ocean
Watching the waves wash the sand
The phone calls, the nights in your arms
Times together, just hanging out
The sweet music of Jagged Edge
Times we made love, making me shout
To you I dedicate my life
With all my love I promise
To keep away all harm and strife
To love you until my last breath
The love I feel for you is real
To come along once in a lifetime
On this day let's make this deal
To love one another forever and a day

Tunes at Twilight will showcase multiple artists performing a variety of favorite hits featuring tropical Reggae sounds and cool Caribbean tunes; classic, contemporary and cutting edge Country songs; and the relaxing beats of sultry Jazz. Performers will change each Tuesday throughout the summer. The 2004 series will kick off on June 22nd and will include performances every Tuesday evening through September 7th from 6 PM – 10 PM.

Summer Swing begins with an opening night on June 16th and will continue every Wednesday night until September 8th, starting at 6:00 p.m. During these Summer Swing evenings, the Bill and Bo Winiker Big Band will recreate the excitement of the classic big band era. In addition, each week the band will pay tribute to some of America's favorite and most famous artists of Swing, including Louis Armstrong, Duke Ellington, Frank Sinatra, Benny Goodman, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, Billie Holiday, Glenn Miller, Artie Shaw and Ella Fitzgerald.

The Blues Barge – A floating stage anchored behind the Boston Harbor Hotel at Rowes Wharf provides the setting for some of the hottest local and national blues artists. The concert series begins with an opening night on June 17th and will include performances every Thursday evening through September 9th, from 6:00PM to 10:00PM. You can look for G.E. Smith, Nicole Nelson, Toni Lynn Washington, the Nighthawks, Anson Funderburgh & the Rockets with Sam Myers, Michelle Wilson and Debbie Davies.

The Movies by Moonlight series offers guests a chance to revisit a few of time's most memorable films. The 2004 series will begin with an opening showing on June 18th and will continue every Friday night until September 10th, starting at dusk. The cool evening breeze and view from Intrigue Café set the stage for the perfect opportunity to view these classic films under the stars, while enjoying the light, seasonal cuisine of Chef Daniel Bruce.

JUNE 9–22, 2004

GEMINI MAY 21–JUNE 20

The transit of Venus across the sun on June 8 can have a remarkable effect on you personally. Not that you'll become that much more of a prima donna than you are now, but something may occur to send your self-confidence soaring. It's also likely that you'll get a truly brilliant idea and actually entertain a concept so foreign to your way of thinking that it hasn't crossed your mind before. With changes like these in the offing, you'd be wise to prepare your significant other. Have that "what if?" talk soon.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

It's out of your hands. Much of what's taking place right now is centered in Gemini, the home of your unconscious and other behind-the-scenes maneuvering. Still, you could find yourself in an awkward position as militant Mars, advancing through Cancer, runs across abusive, power-mad Pluto. However, you have the experience and endurance (courtesy of Saturn, also in your sign) to make whatever adjustment is necessary. Try to relax; the present period of trials and tribulations eases up around the summer solstice when Mars marches into Leo.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

An association that you have tenuous ties to can become the focal point of your thoughts, hopes and social life for far longer than anyone intended. That's because the conjunction of Venus and your sun ruler this week is a lot different than the ones that have come before; this one is visible, at least on the East Coast. Although you may entertain fantasies about the ideal romantic relationship, the real one may not be nearly as tender. Things can turn nasty if one partner feels obliged to accept the other's demands when the sun confronts coercive Pluto.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

What occurs this week, while retrograde Venus meets the Gemini sun, can impact your career and reputation until the sun enters Leo in July and Venus has returned to this special spot. Even if the events seem inconsequential or are primarily social encounters, don't discount their importance. Other indications that you're negotiating a path to greater success: Your busy Mercury ruler connects with protective, prosperous Jupiter in Virgo as well as popular Venus and arty, mystical Neptune. You're the beneficiary.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

This is a good time to go someplace else, somewhere exotic or at least educational. Maybe across an ocean to watch the transit of Venus? While your ruling planet is retrograde, even brand-new experiences tend to echo ones you've had before. Not a bad thing if you need to learn a lesson about relationships and why you keep attracting the same sort of person. If there's one you want to get rid of, oust him or her when the highly adaptable, mobile Gemini sun opposes Pluto around the 10th.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

If you managed to avoid a big brouhaha during the full moon, when Venus was opposing Pluto, then you should be able to sidestep the next big confrontation; the sun's opposition to your co-ruler on the 11th. But if you think a showdown is inevitable, do something to make it less traumatic. Stage the altercation at someone else's house, in front of witnesses. Although you may have the physical and emotional strength to get through a down-and-dirty scene intact, you might not have sufficient financial resources to recover from the aftermath.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Another round of bad behavior and/or denial is due when the Gemini sun opposes Pluto in your sign. Are you being banned from the Olympics for using illegal substances? Is your partner taking off for parts unknown? While some possibilities are definite downers, there are other planetary liaisons that suggest you're especially brilliant right now and about to receive good reviews. You might even collect cash or a pretty prize for your contribution to the arts. Might that be the art of bullshitting?

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Free and clear. Seriously, nothing on your chart raises a warning flag right now. You could or should be collecting lots of information, especially if you're in a service profession or the healing arts. While the Gemini planets are doing their thing, disseminating and dispersing, your best bet is to log on to that energy and let it carry you through to Father's Day. Think of the next week or so as a semi-spiritual excursion, preparation for the relationship issues you'll be dealing with after summer officially begins.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

You're currently in a good spot, almost ready to accept the rewards offered by the life-giving sun and loving Venus in your Gemini house of recreation, risk and romance. If only you wouldn't deny your mystical, spiritual leanings. Are you simply being a contrary Aquarian or do you know something we don't? Since this is a relatively pleasant and productive period, try to make more than a half-assed attempt to get all the joy out of it you can. Concentrate on the creative and romantic possibilities, ignore the risk.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Assume that, despite the maelstrom whirling around you, positive energy is getting through. That somehow your higher self, your Neptune ruler, is benefiting by the changes at home, within the family (can we still call it a circle or has it become an armed camp?). The information you get this week might serve other interests than your own, so take all conversations with a grain of salt. And when unpredictable Uranus in your sign turns retrograde on the 10th, remind yourself that you'll be far less excitable from now through October.

ARIES MARCH 20–APRIL 19

A former classmate might turn up or a neighbor may cozy up when the Gemini sun and retrograde Venus meet this week. A trip, even if it's only down memory lane, follows. Other opportunities to evaluate key relationships could appear while Venus is retrograde, but try to keep those you've established with your editor, repairmen and mechanic on an even keel. You don't want to flip them off during these tricky times. Meanwhile, the closer we get to Father's Day, a household matter or perhaps a parent may become a source of contention.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Busy planetary activity in your Gemini money house suggests that you'll be paying more than your usual amount of attention to what's coming in and going out. Try to postpone an important financial decision until your Venus ruler flips out of retrograde on the 29th. Until then, it's likely that your sense of values will undergo a slight modification, your customary spending habits may change or, if you do sell a photograph, romance novel or screenplay, you'll become a more glamorous figure than you were last week. Art rules.

IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Paige Rice sets an excellent example for future Sightings contributors at the Ocean Reef Club in Key Largo, Fla.

If you ever try to say that Madison, Wis., doesn't host the world's largest brat fest...well, Eloise, Bob and Donald here have got a big sign that says otherwise, partner.

Mike and Joyce Hanlon stand in front of Signal Hill, Newfoundland, where the first transatlantic wireless communication was received. It said, "Send Paige Rice."

Al Young hits the beach in Aruba, where even signs have little tiki-hut roofs over them. Al rode a bicycle around Aruba after burning down his rental car's straw roof.

Michael Makaitis and Tanya Nagle share a read at Rheinfels Castle, near St. Goar, Germany. Rheinfels is the family estate of Count Chocula.

Melissa and Melinda Manoukian and friends get physical aboard the Costa Mediterranea's Armenian Heritage Cruise, somewhere in the eastern Caribbean.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the Venetian Masked Ball, clockwise from upper left: Ray and Maria Stata; Alan and Kristen Rouleau; Chris Mitchum and Doreen Corkin; a cool masked couple.

WHO WAS THAT MASKED MAN?...

In addition to all the spectacular productions it mounts, Boston Lyric Opera is to be commended for doing more than its share to counteract the appalling lack of costume parties in Boston.

Take, for instance, the Venetian Masked Ball held at the Four Seasons, where guests went all-out to disguise themselves in get-ups worthy of Carnevale. Despite the masks, there were confirmed sightings of such local notables as mega-philanthropists Ray and Maria Stata and Roger and Norma Saunders; impossibly good-looking young things Nicole and Ramsey Alsarraf; redheaded socialite Doreen Corkin squired by the dapper Chris Mitchum (son of actor Robert); banking behemoth Richard DeAgazio and his lady love, Nikki Feldbaum; custom tailor to the stars Alan Rouleau and the stunning Kristen; patrician arts patron Linda Cabot Black; thoroughbred racehorse syndicator Cynthia Frederick; retired mutual fund poobah Sherif Nada and the flawless Mary; prominent Beacon Hillions Hillary and Chris Gabrieli; and so on and so forth.

Dinner was accompanied by a delightful performance by a trio of tenors, and dessert was barely on the table before everyone was dancing. One thing about those opera lovers: They know how to throw a buffo party.

FISH SO FRESH YOU COULD SLAP IT...

People have joked about it for years, but someone finally had the nerve to do it: serve sushi at a fund-raiser held in the New England Aquarium.

The first annual Ben-Gurion Society Bash, held by Combined Jewish Philanthropies, attracted the likes of the evening's honorees, Phil Gordon and Lori Sidman; art dealer Abi Ross Goodman and her bespectacled hipster husband, Marc; gorgeous redhead Amy Finegold and her state rep husband, Barry; raven-haired fashionplate Erin Appel; yummy couple Marci Lorber and Jeff Katz; unflagging philanthropists Rachael and Andy Goldfarb; the shockingly beautiful Jennifer Winn; and so and so forth down the list of prominent young Bostonians of the Hebrew persuasion.

Despite a few squawks from the penguins during the obligatory speeches, everything went off without a hitch, and everyone had plenty to eat, although as one guest pointed out, "If you don't feel like standing in line for sushi, you can always reach into a tank and pull some out."

At the Aquarium, clockwise from top: Marci Lorber and Jeff Katz; Barry and Amy Finegold; Phil Gordon and Abi Ross Goodman.

JUST DON'T LET PETA CATCH YOU...

For a Monday night in May, the Boston Children's Theater managed to assemble a high-wattage array of local notables at the newly refurbished State Room (formerly the Bay Tower Room) for its Galaxy of Stars fund-raiser.

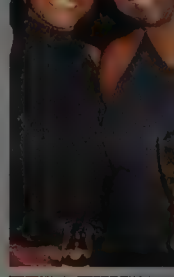
Present and accounted for: New York entertainment reporter Toni Senecal (one of the evening's honorees) and her proud parents, Barbara and Paul; children's TV legend Rex Trailer; radio personality Marjorie Clapprood; kabuki socialite Marilyn Riseman; dowager empress Smoki Bacon and her consort, Dick Concannon; WBZ-TV news director Matt Ellis; the incomparable Spring Sirkin; and comedian Jimmy Tingle, who entertained the audience after dinner while the winning bids in the silent auction were being tabulated.

"Look what I got," enthused fashion plate Diana Shoolman, holding up a vintage mink coat. "It's totally out of style, but I can either turn it into pillows or wear it as a joke." IB

MARTHA STEWART WOULD'VE PLOTZED...



As if Boston didn't have enough historic firsts to brag about, it can now boast of hosting America's first gay society wedding.

On May 17th, Alexander Westerhoff and Thomas Lang (the first couple to obtain a civil union in Vermont) were married at Crowell Chapel in Manchester-by-the-Sea. The Rev. Peter Gomes (the openly gay black chaplain of Harvard) presided, and the decidedly upscale guest list included the likes of Brahmin do-gooders Jane and Bill Saltonstall; philanthropic fun couple Hod and Cassandra Irvine; legal glamazon Nikki Sanders and her partner, Averrill Roberts; charming southern decorator Michael Carter; New York transplant Ashley Scott; and select members of the North Shore's well-heeled horsey set and the city's so-called "A-gays."

The reception was held at the couple's newly constructed mansion—a reasonable facsimile of the Petit Trianon—which is stuffed with priceless knickknacks and bric-a-brac, ranging from Greek and Roman statuary to a chair that belonged to Napoleon. In addition to enough champagne to float the Titanic and buckets of caviar, there were fireworks, go-go girls and a wedding cake shaped like a six-foot tree in a planter.

"This may well be the wackiest Monday night Manchester has ever seen," said one guest, adding, "Friday and Saturday are a reach here."

Indeed, it was one for the record books, regardless of the couple's gender, and it proved that anti-gay-marriage advocates might have at least one thing right: Same-sex weddings will certainly threaten straight couples if all of them turn out to be this fabulous.

At the Lang/ Westerhoff wedding, clockwise from top: Alex and Tom—the happy couple; Eleanor Spaak, Cassandra and Hod Irvine; Stephanie Chigas, Bill Lumpkin, a go-go dancer and Darren Anderson; Averrill Roberts and Nikki Sanders; Jane and Bill Saltonstall.

FROM THE EDITOR

ON THE HOME FRONT

With its hand-me-down furniture and unruly clutter (too many books and clothes; too little storage space), my apartment's not much to look at. I've long fantasized about redecorating and creating a cozy, orderly space I'd enjoy coming home to. But when I head to the furniture store or thumb through shelter magazines, with their endless options, I panic. What do I buy first? How do I pull it all together? And what if I hate that big, expensive sofa in six months?

It turns out I'm not the only one with questions like those. So for our annual Interiors issue, we called in the experts for some answers. In "Home Improvement" (page 24), six talented interior designers offer decorating dos and don'ts as well as tips on the latest trends in style and color and advice for choosing and working with a designer, if you opt to call in a pro.

For gorgeous inspiration, our cover story (page 18) takes you inside the home of one of Boston's top designers. Dennis Duffy's South End condo shows you what an oasis home can be.

MY WIFE AND I WERE RECENTLY PICNICKING ON THE CHARLES WHEN A POLICE OFFICER INFORMED US WE WERE NOT ALLOWED TO DRINK OUTSIDE.

—WILLIAM DEJONG-LAMBERT

WELL WINE NOT?

I write to ask whether the locations you mention in the "Go Picnicking" section of the "30 Things to Do This Summer" article (May 26) are indeed places where one can enjoy the "bottle of wine" you refer to. I raise this question because my wife, 16-month-old son and I were recently picnicking on the Charles when a police officer stopped and informed us we were not allowed to drink alcohol outside in Boston. Thus, he had my wife and I pour out our bottle of wine.

Though we were glad not to be arrested, it obviously ruined the evening. As people who have enjoyed many picnics in New York City (where the police never seemed concerned about an open wine bottle) and throughout Europe (where it's not illegal to enjoy a drink with a picnic), we read your article with great interest, as it gave us hope that the same thing may indeed be possible in Boston. Is it?

Boston

Editor's response: You are right: If you drink in public in Boston, you are, in the immortal words of Judas Priest, breakin' the law—even in the context of a picnic. While the spirit of the law is probably aimed at preventing slovenly, 40-oz.-toting blottos from clogging the sidewalks, it unfortunately also covers your bottle of Chianti on the Charles. Perhaps New York cops turn a blind eye to a benign glass of vino, but this is the state that had blue laws up until this year. What to do? You didn't hear this from us, but some people have been known to be discreet and savor the added excitement of knowing they're being naughty.

BEAUTY BITES BACK AGAIN

I was thoroughly enjoying your "Beauty and the Boys" article in the April 14 issue until I hit your question, "How do Boston women compare with women you've known in other cities? Is there any particular characteristic of Boston's women's beauty routine or look that is noticeably different?"

I have to say, not only was the question obviously going to get some offensive answers, but the answers were worse than I had anticipated! I'm not even going to address the double standard that exists in all cities across the country with women's looks versus men's. That's not a battle I wish to take on. But I would hope that a wide-reaching magazine such as the IMPROPER would try to help women by not asking this type of question in the first place! Also, I'm wondering when the IMPROPER will be doing their follow-up article asking women about the men in Boston and their looks, clothes and intelligence. I can count on one hand the guys that I've met in Boston who are both good-looking and have an IQ higher than their waist size. If I have missed this article in a more recent IMPROPER, please let me know!

TRENDS TITTLE-TATTLE PEOPLE PANACHE

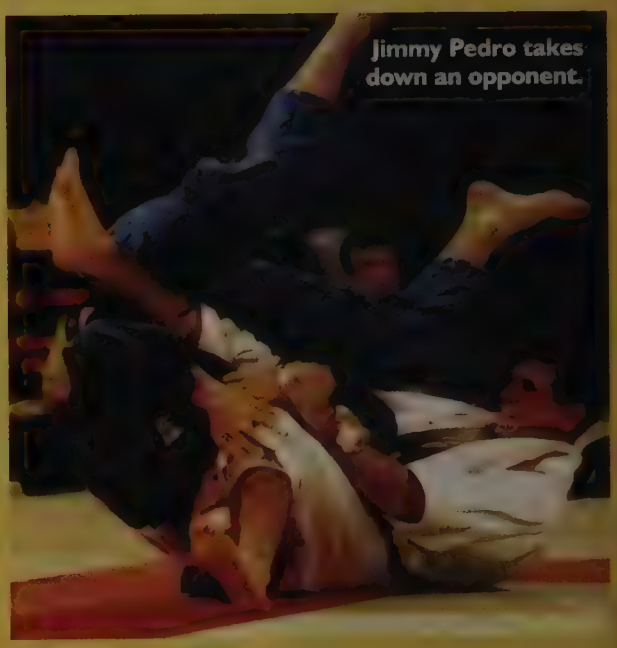
THE FINER THINGS

Anyone with a slightly obsessive, type A personality will fall in love with Harvard Square's newest retailer, Cross. Packed with nifty gadgetry arranged by color, the gallery-like store's displays are reminiscent of the gorgeous order you find in a Japanese department store. Neat-freaks are exactly the kinds of people who will love Cross' products (which include much more than the pens you know them for) as well as the store's clean aesthetic.



Bins are stocked with supplies to help you stay organized: notepads, designer pens ($22–$835), sticky notes, frames and photo albums—there's even a personal library kit to help you organize your books. Cross also carries books on subjects like design, decor and 500 ideas for reorganizing your workspace.

Browsers beware: You'll find yourself wanting all kinds of things you didn't know you needed—like Italian stationery, designer laptop tote bags, fancy ink blotters and leather journals. The store carries some whimsical items as well, such as the Fortune Shaker, a sleek canister containing sticks and a scroll that you can use to predict the future. Zero Brattle St., Cambridge (617-868-7020). —E.H.

THE ATHENS GOLD RUSH

The 2000 Summer Olympics in Sydney were supposed to be the end of the road for Methuen's Jimmy Pedro. Considered by many to be the favorite to bring home the gold in judo, Pedro finished a disappointing fifth and planned to retire. "I had every intention of walking away from competition and moving on with my life," says the 33-year-old. But while attending a medal ceremony at 2002 Winter Games, he once again got the urge to compete. Now, thanks to support from his family and friends, as well as a hell of a lot of training, Pedro is ready to give us all the chance to root for him one more time this summer in Athens. "I've been to three Olympics," he says, "and now all that's left is for me to take the gold." —Rich Levine inner view

PENN JILLETTE

Most know him as the larger, louder half of comedy/magic duo Penn & Teller, but now Penn Jillette has added novelist to his résumé. After 30 years of solid success with P&T's two-man act, Jillette has forayed into fiction with his first novel, Sock, out in July. Told from the perspective of a sock monkey named Dickey, the book is a buddy/cop story cut with enough twisted gore and sex scenarios to give the childhood toy a permanent bad rep. Jillette chatted with us about the inspiration for his dark novel, which he reads from at the Coolidge Corner Theatre July 7.

IB: Do you own a sock monkey?

PJ: Yes I do. I have my Dickey from when I was a kid. Though sadly, my sister informed me—after I wrote the whole damn book—that they had replaced it on me, and it's not the original. But I do have a sock monkey and it's looking at me right now.

IB: It's a pretty dark story. What was your inspiration?

PJ: Not to be too melodramatic, but I think it comes directly from my mom and dad dying. I was really close to them and they both died within a year of each other. Being an atheist and trying to come to grips with dealing with losing people who you really love is really hard.

IB: Most of your paragraphs end with a lyric from a pop song. What's that all about?

PJ: I almost always have a few lines of a song or snatch of a tune in my head, and I just used it as short hand at the end of paragraphs to help me remember what the tone was when it came to the rewrites. When I went to take them out it seemed like it might help a reader get a little bit of the tone in their head. But it's completely obsessive and in absolutely every paragraph.

IB: What does Teller think about the book?

PJ: We're going to find out. He's reviewing it for the New York Times. Either I'll get a really great review out of it, or something will go wrong with our gun bit and I'll blow his head off. Either way, I'll get some good publicity out of it.

IB: Both of you have written before.

PJ: I didn't even realize this, but he wrote a book about his mom and dad—and we've written three books together that are tricks and short stories—but our first real books were about our parents.

IB: So is writing a natural offshoot of showbiz?

PJ: Yeah. I have no evidence of this outside of myself, but in my heart, I've always felt like more of a writer than anything else. I've always loved the ideas more than the execution. It kind of seems like "funny magic guy" wrote a novel, but it's not quite that different for me. I guess Sock seems like a really long, strange, Penn & Teller bit.

IB: If Sock were turned into a movie, who would play the monkey?

PJ: I just don't know who's that small. I guess it would have to be Mini-Me to fit in a little suit. No, I don't know, but obviously if Sock were turned into a movie, since it was narrated, I would love to see it animated and then get to do the voice, because it really is my voice.

IB: Who's a better writer, you or Teller?

PJ: If you want clarity, Teller is an astonishingly good writer who's very historically minded and very accurate. I tend to bring a type of goofiness. I think my only plus is I tend to go out there. —Jessica Iredale

FOOD AND THE FOURTH

Beacon Hill BBQ... So everyone knows that a 4th of July weekend without a BBQ is about as cool as winning a raffle for tickets to a Michael Bolton concert. Want to have fun but don't feel like slaving over the grill all morning/day/night? Try heading over to the Beacon Hill Hotel & Bistro for its 4th of July celebration. The special à la carte menu is available from 11 am--9 pm and includes all the BBQ faves like hot dogs, burgers, corn bread and watermelon (not to mention some patriotic homemade sangria). 25 Charles St., Boston (617-723-1133).

Cellar Dwellers... It doesn't take much arm-twisting to get us in the mood for Legal Sea Foods, but the restaurant giant just gave us another reason to head there for dinner. Legal's Park Square location has transformed its lower level into an swanky wine cellar that, aside from being home to more than 10,000 bottles of wine, serves as an elegant place to eat. "We've always had an extensive wine list and really wanted a place to showcase it," says David Alphonse, director of beverage operations. 26 Park Plaza, Boston (617-426-4444).

Legal Seafoods

Turning Tables... The past few months have seen some changes at Andy Husbands' Tremont 647 and Sister Sorel. Matthew Audette replaced Jason Santos as executive chef after Santos moved to Providence in December to take over as chef/co-owner of Husbands' newest venture, Kestral. Now, the South End spot welcomes Jamie Bissonnette into the exec chef seat. On June 1, the former 647 sous chef took over the kitchen. Bissonnette began working under Husbands and Santos in 2001 and expanded his culinary repertoire with stints at Pigalle, Peking Tom's and Pho Republique. He's now in the process of revamping the menu, incorporating more local produce and vegetarian options. 645/647 Tremont St., Boston (617-266-4600).

Lite Up... Light Mexican food seems like the ultimate oxymoron. After all, even if you suck the life out of your next burrito by holding the guac, sour cream and cheese, the rice and tortilla have enough carbs to send Atkinsites into glycemic meltdown. But Olé Mexican Grill's new Modern-Mexican Lite menu does away with heavy sour creams, beans and cheese, leaving salsa, chipotle and peppers to create the south-of-the-border flavor. The menu changes daily, but diners can expect to see options like huachinango frito (pan-fried red snapper with cilantro and blood orange chipotle), seviche de salmon (salmon with citrus mustard and chipotle) and lots of sorbets. 11 Springfield St., Cambridge (617-492-4495).

COUCHED IN COMFORT

When it comes to furniture, some people buy on a strictly aesthetic basis. But if you're looking for comfort as well as style, check out Boston Interiors' new Earth & Elements seating collection. Chairs and couches are upholstered in fabrics that will remind you of your favorite comfy clothes. SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Lock, Stock and Two Tickets to Jamaica... New dating services pop up about as frequently as new low-carb diets. But the new Boston Lock and Key puts a funky twist on the traditional way of meeting people. At their events, women get locks and the men get keys, and their goal is to mingle until they find a match. On June 30 at the Sweetwater Café from 7-10 pm, Lock and Key launches in Boston with a Jamaican Jam Island Party. Make a match and you'll have the chance to win a free trip to the Hedonism III resort in Jamaica. The company hosts events for all ages, professions and sexual orientation and plans on running at least two local events a month. www.bostonlocknkey.com.

A Lang Time Coming... With gay marriage comes the logical next step: gay honeymoons. Lesbian-travel company Olivia sets sail with a sapphic newlywed cruise July 3-10. The itinerary takes passengers from Boston to Montreal—stopping in Provincetown for the 4th—and features two performances by k.d. lang. If you're a lesbian, family member of a lesbian, or just want to hang out with 1,200 lesbians on a big boat, go to www.olivia.com.

The Jury's Inn... Ever spent a night in the slammer? Well, here's your chance...kinda. For months, Dublin-based Jurys Hotel Group has been restoring the former Boston Police Headquarters, and in late June the Jurys Boston Hotel is slated to open. We say it's about time that Boston, the most Irish city in America, got its first Irish hotel. The newly renovated building on Stuart Street has more than 200 rooms, five meeting rooms and best of all, three eateries, including Cuffs, an Irish bar; the Stanhope Grille, a cosmopolitan restaurant that offers a breakfast buffet, lunch and dinner, and the Il Barista Wine and Coffee Bar. 350 Stuart St., Boston (617-266-7200).

Giddy-Up... Though South Shore homeboys far outnumber the cowboys at Quincy's WaterWorks, the second season of the club's Buckwild Thursdays kicked off with a bang June 10. JAM'N 94.5's Melissa hosts the hip-hop-meets-honky-tonk night, whose main attraction is a wildly popular bucking mechanical bull. Every Thursday hundreds of boozed up patrons ride the bull in an Urban Cowboy–style contest. The man and woman who stay put the longest each night get to come back for the final ride-off at the end of the season for the chance to win a tropical vacation. Bud and Sissy would approve. 333 Victory Road, Quincy (617-689-0600).

The Nudist Thing in Cambridge... Cambridge Community Television unveiled a unique fund-raising tool June 13, and it wasn't a bake sale or auction. The intrepid CCTV-ers convinced a slew of Cantabrigians to take it all off for the inaugural Cambridge Uncovered: The Calendar. Participants included dancer Rozann Kraus from the Dance Complex; a group of construction workers at a job site off Huron Avenue; the staff of the 1369 Coffee House, and Mr. June, former gubernatorial candidate Robert Reich. The au naturel calendar runs from September of this year through 2005 and costs $15. It's available at locations around Cambridge or at www.cctvcambridge.org.

What's Old Is New Again... Two local clubs have refashioned themselves with different names and vibes. First, the Upstairs Lounge at 69 Lancaster St., near the FleetCenter, is now Eureka! at the Upstairs Lounge. Changes include a fresh paint job and the addition of a pool table and stage, as well as some new faces behind the bar. Also revamped is Rumor nightclub (formerly Vapor) at 100 Warrenton St., in the Theater District. Friday is Lounge 54 night, with a new VIP lounge and DJs spinning hip-hop. Ya heard?

OLD SCHOOL

Reunion is all the fun of college with none of the pesky learning.

I was a little ambivalent about attending my five-year college reunion. After all, I'd gone to homecoming the year after I graduated and felt like I might as well have just gone to the nearest high-school parking lot to lurk around. At least there the girls would be impressed that I could buy Zima for them. The looks I got from the students back in the fall of 1999 said, "Tailgating at a D-III football game, rooting for a school at which you're no longer enrolled: You're a sad little man." But momentum amongst my friends grew for the five-year reunion, and so it was that I found myself once again rolling onto the Colby College campus.

The five-year reunion was different from homecoming in one very important way: There were no students around to make me feel old. Or at least, not many. And the ones who were on campus didn't make me feel old, they made me feel cool. It's good to see that Colby's nerdfirmative action program is really taking shape. We're talking kids who look like the love spawn of Rick Moranis and a graphing calculator, and this is coming from a guy who wrote for the school newspaper and has seen the movie Rad 15 times. It's possible that Colby has hired Stephen Hawking to run the admissions department. I think I speak for all of the less intellectually gifted alumni when I say that, like, um, I don't, you know, understand that…and stuff.

Speaking of dumb alumni (dumb like a fox with transitions like that one), many brain cells perished as my classmates and I took advantage of our above-the-law status. There's nothing like spending a weekend at school when you've already graduated and they want you to give them money. It's an entirely different dynamic than when you're a student, and you're always scurrying to turn down your music or stash that Rodin you stole from the art museum and made into a bong. "What are they gonna do, take away my diploma?" was the rhetorical question of the weekend.

For example, my friend Pete and I walked into a dorm carrying two tables we'd stolen from the student union to use for drinking games. We both reflexively stopped when we saw the security officer standing there glaring at us. Then we looked at one another, shrugged and continued on our way upstairs with the pilfered furniture. Sorry, security, you're out of your jurisdiction. I've driven across the county line into Alumniville. Also falling under the category of "things that would've gotten us on double-secret probation five years ago," two Class of '99ers stole the school president's golf cart and drove it down to the field house for our dinner. The main rule was "Don't burn the place down," and my friend Steve came close to violating that one when he marched into a lounge carrying lit fireworks. Hey, Steve's a lawyer, not a common-sense salesman.

I don't want you to get the wrong idea. We're not in college anymore, and our priorities have certainly changed. The mighty river of responsibility has eroded our youthful exuberance with worries of jobs, families and retirement funds. For instance, back in school we used to sit at tables for hours on end trying to throw dice into one another's beer cups. So juvenile. Well, things have changed. We don't play beer die anymore, OK? Now we play flip cups.

My only qualm with the reunion was the dinner, which cost $43.50 and featured a slab of chalky chicken covered in what was supposed to be a sauce but had congealed into a thick jelly. The next week, I complained over e-mail to my friends that I'm going to pay $43.50 for a piece of cold chicken, it ought to at least be served by a naked lady. To which one of my friends replied, "We actually stopped at Kahoots [a strip club near Hartford] on the way home and I was able to get out of there with a chicken sandwich dinner and boobies for a $25 spot. I say for the 10-year reunion, we just go to Kahoots!"

Reunion was a great trip back to college days, but I'm glad I'm not a student anymore. No matter how much fun you're having in school, in the back of your mind there's always a test you should be studying for or a paper you should be writing. It never ends. Whereas with writing, you can just go home whenever…you…run…out of space.

YOU THINK THAT'S FUNNY?

Soroff ON

TONY COREY

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Tie designer and artist Anthony (Tony) Corey was born in Boston and studied advertising and fine arts at Marist College in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., graduating in 1983. An avid horseman, he has worked as a thoroughbred syndicator and owned numerous racehorses and has competed in the Hunter-Jumper A circuit. His paintings and bronze sculptures of horses regularly appear in gallery exhibits in Saratoga Springs, N.Y., during the annual summer race meet. He launched his line of neckties on a whim, when he was unable to find ties to his liking. Manufactured in Como, Italy, from silks made to his specification, Corey's line of bold, stylish neckwear is sold at upscale men's stores like Neiman-Marcus. He also comments on style and fashion for Fox 25 Morning News. Dedicated to community service and charitable causes, he's a member of the board of Community Servings and has created a shelter to save retired racing greyhounds from destruction. All profits from two of his neckties have gone to support breast cancer and AIDS research. He lives in the Back Bay.

Jonathan Soroff: Do clothes make the man?
Tony Corey: It depends. When it comes to how someone presents himself to the world, yes, definitely. Does it really make you a man, or the man? No. You need a helluva lot more than that. But when it comes to dress, it's packaging, it's advertising and it does say something about the inside too. It says what you think about yourself.
JS: What do you look at first when you're assessing someone's appearance?
TC: An air of confidence, even if they don't dress well or aren't particularly attractive. If they exude confidence, I pick it up from a block away and I find it very intriguing and appealing. I find people attractive if they're comfortable in their own skin.
JS: You became a tie designer because you were looking for ties that didn't exist?
TC: Yeah, it was very much on a whim. I realized I had ideas for ties that weren't out there, and I just decided to see if it was something I could do, if people would take those ideas seriously.
JS: Do you think of yourself as a fashion designer?
TC: No. I think of myself as an aesthete, and someone who likes to be entertained visually all the time, and hopefully an artist [he glances at his oil paintings hanging in his Back Bay drawing room].
JS: Are ties impervious to fashion?
TC: Well, they get wide or skinny or go in and out of vogue, but I think they're going to be around forever. It's still one way that a man can set himself apart, look dressy and like he's intentionally made an effort to look civilized. The open collar's great. A little hairy chest showing is sexy. But that's about animal magnetism, and sometimes it's more appropriate to look buttoned up.

> [TIES ARE] GOING TO BE AROUND FOREVER. IT'S STILL ONE WAY THAT A MAN CAN SET HIMSELF APART, LOOK DRESSY AND LIKE HE'S INTENTIONALLY MADE AN EFFORT TO LOOK CIVILIZED

JS: Is there ever any excuse for a clip-on?
TC: Never. [Laughs.] If I see them, I get a little bit of a rash.
JS: How can you tell a good tie?
TC: The first thing is just if it looks good to you at first glance, as far as color and pattern. But a real quality tie is distinguished by very subtle, fine things. The density of the silk, how much per square inch. I also like when some thought's gone into how they've treated that silk. It says, "Someone put some effort into this."
JS: What about those stripes on the inside ticking?
TC: The gold stripes? The highest are five gold, and it refers to the wool content of the lining. The more wool, the more expensive and plumper the lining. It doesn't mean that a tie with fewer stripes isn't as good, because the intent may be for a thinner lining and a thinner look. That's the manufacturer's preference. But if you do see five stripes, it's a high-quality lining.
JS: Is silk the only appropriate material for ties?
TC: No. Cotton ties are very cool in the summer and look great with a cotton suit. Knit ties—a lot of people can't stand them—but I see people doing them in an updated way and it can look great, although generally when you think of knit ties, you go, "Ugh."
JS: How do you spot a bad tie?
TC: Well, it's usually not the tie. It's someone who can't pair it well. Almost every tie could have a place on some outfit on some person at some occasion.
JS: What about the theme ties—golf clubs or ticker tapes or wine labels?
TC: I don't particularly care for them, although I have done some. One of my original goals was to do updated twists on those frumpy, clubby, status-y, motif-y ties that were so boring and never looked great to me. My whole take on design is tweaking tradition and seeing if I can pull it off. So I've done little frogs, but they weren't super-preppy. They were frogs on acid. A very busy pattern, almost geometric and comical. Also, with my involvement in the equestrian world, I do a lot of custom ties in the colors of people's racing silks.
JS: Can women wear ties?
TC: Yeah. I may piss some people off by saying this, but if you're feminine enough to not look like a man in menswear, it can be very sexy.
JS: Best use for a tie, aside from around the neck?
TC: I guess tying someone's wrists to the bedpost. [Laughs.]
JS: Is that the most unconventional use you've ever put a tie to?
TC: No. I've used old ties out of desperation when I couldn't find a dog leash.
JS: One thing a tie should never, ever be used for?
TC: Wiping your mouth. Blowing your nos
JS: One occasion when a man should always wear a tie?
TC: A job interview.
JS: Is paisley a crime against humanity?
TC: No. It's really a very casual, elega pattern, but we get sick of things. W haven't seen paisley in a while, whic means eventually we'll miss it, and it wi come back for a while.
JS: What's up with ascots? Who can get awa with them?
TC: Anyone but an American, for som reason. We just can't wear them. They' incredibly flattering. No one looks bad one. But an American always looks lik he's trying to be either Thurston Howe III or some louche foreign playboy.
JS: How about the knot?
TC: I like the four-in-hand, the one ever one knows. You can leave it loose for a full look or pull it tighter. It's very versatile. think people sometimes make it more com plicated, when they don't need to. A fi Windsor is pretty extreme.
JS: Should all men know how to tie a bow t
TC: No. I like that some don't because th sets me apart from them.
JS: Person you'd most like to see wearing o of your ties?
TC: It's always exciting when the preside wears one. Clinton did. Something I like boast about is that Prince Charles has wo them, and he's not really supposed to w non-British things. It's fun to see a ma icon wearing something I thought up wh sketching on the beach.
JS: Last question: If you were a tie, what would you look like?
TC: Lots of blues and greens, and a hin iridescent purple, with a geometric patt and something equestrian underlying and somehow that mish-mash would tasteful and attractive. [Laughs.] IB

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

A TOUGH PROSPECT

Peabody's Jeff Allison has learned how hard the high school–to–major leagues transition can be.

The life of a big-league ballplayer is that of pure luxury. Bling is the thing when the size of your paycheck is just a way to keep score against your contemporaries. Charter planes, five-star hotels and never having to wait for a table—or anything, for that matter—are just part of the package. That said, it's hard to imagine anybody with big-league talent who's not fully vested in creating that type of life for himself and eventually for his entire family.

Peabody's Jeff Allison was the 16th overall pick in last year's Major League Baseball draft. The Florida Marlins scouted him, drafted him and eventually signed him to a $1.85 million deal.

A kid from a modest upbringing in Peabody, Allison not only fulfilled his dream of playing professional baseball but landed a big chunk of change to fall back on. Talk about a dream coming true. Since he received the big bonus, though, that dream has been a nightmare. Instead of the money being a safety cushion, it was a curse.

With a pocket full of cash, Allison found himself experimenting with some newfound friends and, even worse, the addictive drug OxyContin. His right arm was still strong, but his will was taking a beating. Not exactly what the Marlins were banking on when they signed him up.

Allison's problem is one that's more visible in basketball or football, but certainly not exclusive to those sports. The problem I'm referring to is the "hangers on," the entourage, the posse... Call it what you will, but when you're getting paid and driving the Escalade, you're a bull's-eye for the bad crowd.

Many people believe money has ruined sports. I don't agree, but sudden wealth does challenge the people involved in the game.

The Marlins definitely have a problem with Allison, but before they start assigning blame for why their prize pick isn't pitching—Allison has been placed on the restricted list—they'd better look at their own organizational structure first. While Allison certainly didn't help himself, sending an 18-year-old millionaire to live and work in a shady section of southern Florida without a mentoring program is a head-scratcher.

In the late 1980s, Salem's Jeff Juden was the same type of pitcher. Juden, the Houston Astros' first pick (and the 12th overall) in 1988, left his family in witchcraft country to stir up a potion of his own called a big-league career. Juden, too, was 18 when he left home, but the Astros organization was very involved in connecting Juden with one of its "booster families," local families (usually season ticket holders) who host young players first entering the Astros farm system.

Juden had the talent to play in the majors for 18 years but ended up playing just parts of eight seasons, his notorious temper playing a role in prematurely ending his career. But the fact that Juden made it to the majors at all is a credit to the Astros' mentors, with whom Juden still keeps in touch.

Some teams, however, just make the assumption that because 18-year-olds like Allison can throw like mature men, they are mature men. Wrong! Think about it: Three months before embarking on his professional career, the biggest decision in Allison's life was whether to order a clam plate or the super beef at the Land and Sea restaurant down the street from his house. Up to that point, Allison saw his mother or a multitude of coaches and chaperones every day.

Now he's back at home while his brand new Escalade remains in Florida. The Ma

lins put him in rehab once and were tryi to put him in another program when Allis fled, leaving baseball and his million-doll paycheck behind. He's looking to sell the calade because it brings back bad memorie

Besides his reputation, there have be other losses. Allison was forced to g back about $200,000. But money, he sa isn't everything. Allison says his drug pr lem is behind him. Now he's concentrati on straightening out his mind.

Allison should love baseball like a kid loves cake. But right now he doesn Baseball at the pro level isn't a three-ho a-day thing. It's an all-day, everyday thi So after all these years of being put o pedestal because he throws 95 miles hour, it's back to reality for young Allis He still has so much talent and so much live for. And when he realizes how lu he is to have these blessings, we will the best of Jeff Allison. IB

the designer

Dennis Cody designed the furniture, as we as the space, in his South End apartmen

at home

Duffy has lived in the South End since he moved from New York eight years ago.

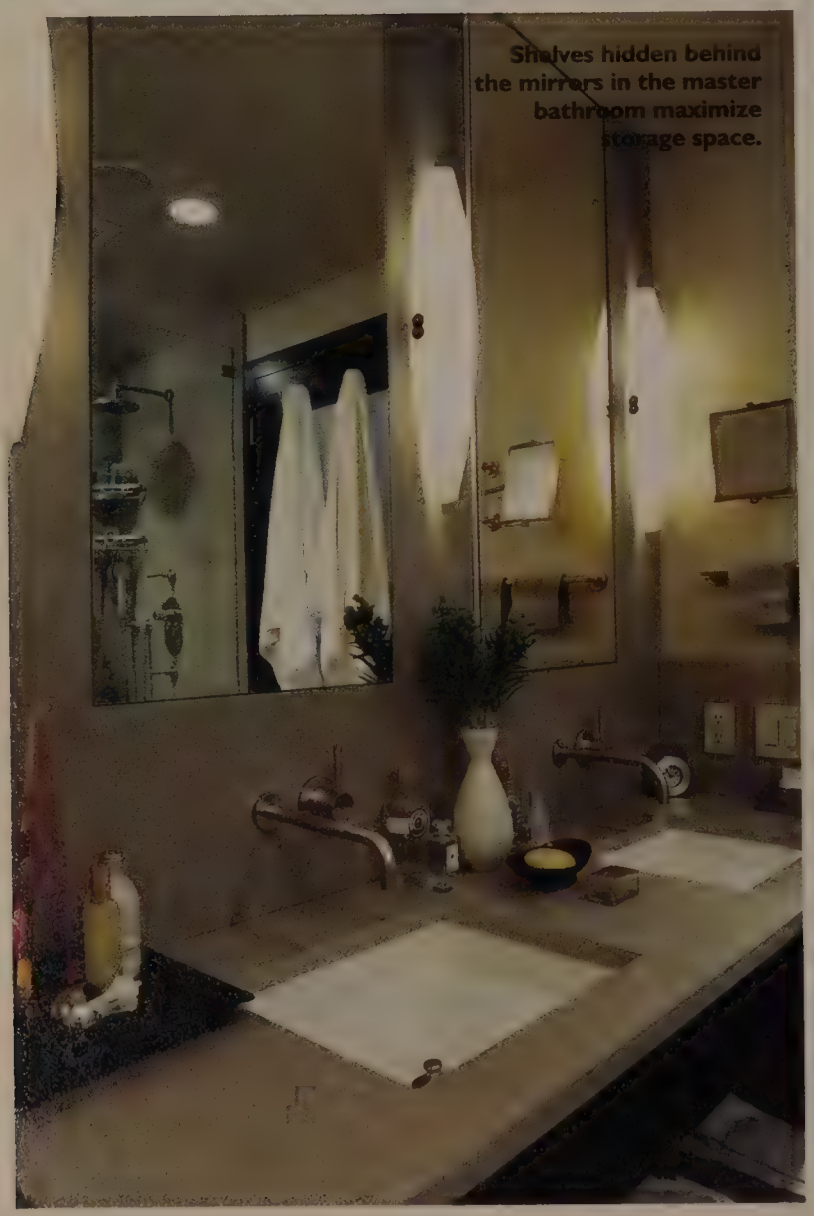
LIGHT AND DARK, MAN-MADE AND NATURAL ELEMENTS BLEND BEAUTIFULLY IN DENNIS DUFFY'S NEW SOUTH END HOME.

When Dennis Duffy goes to work in the morning, he can go by way of the bathroom that joins his living space and his office, Duffy Design Group. Or, for a more luxurious experience, he can step into the foyer that also serves both his home and his office, in the process treating his feet to an early-morning massage on the smooth, black river stone embedded in the limestone floor.

Duffy is the interior designer known for, among other projects, Manny Ramirez's penthouse suite at the Ritz-Carlton, the Zen-like rooms of Boylston Street's boutique Charlesmark Hotel (he's about to begin a new project there), and the sleekly surprising dining room of this year's Boston Junior League Show House, at the 1805 Commandant's House in the Charlestown Navy Yard.

But this space, on Washington Street in the South End, is the designer's own, and Duffy defies the old saw that the shoemaker's children go barefoot. Besides its obvious beauty and drama, the newly created space is a testament to the clean lines, natural elements and sophisticated use of materials Duffy is known for. What's more, he can explain it.

"There are no rules; there is simply what works and what you like. I'm very aware of the building, of its architecture. I like harmonious contrast," he says. "There should be light and dark, masculine and feminine, the beauty of man-made things and the beauty of nature. I love to use art, and I always incorporate things from nature."



One example is that wonderfully comfortable foyer floor. Palm-size, rounded black stones set into pale limestone slabs create an abstract, pebbled rectangle that not only feels good underfoot, but recalls walled gardens, ancient well-worn walkways, or oriental rugs. Above, functional lighting is dramatic and sleek, as well—rounded fixtures gleam down from inside three deep, rectangular ceiling coffers finished in dark metallic blue. To the right, the enclosed foyer opens into the busy company office. Straight ahead, a door leads into an apartment full of light and views of the surrounding city.

Duffy says, "The entry was inspired by a Japanese garden. It sets the tone for the whole apartment."

The fifth-floor condo has an open-space layout, with areas flowing into each other, and dining and seating defined by groups of furniture. Inside the entrance is the kitchen, located at the apartment's center. The large cooking island is a parallelogram, its long sides aligned with the one of the building's outsid walls. A corner points to the dining area. Countertops, backsplash and the island surface are finishe in butterfly uba tuba, an especially scrumptious granite mottled in shades of green, brown and cream.

"It's worth using just so that you can say it," Duffy grins. "Uba tuba – what a name!"

The hooded stove vent, refrigerator, appliances and hardware are stainless steel. Hanging cabinet are painted the same warm neutral color as the walls.

"These cabinets appear like walls. They'd be too heavy if they were dark wood," the designer say "This space is urban, with the higher level of finish that requires. And the continuity comes from th use of the same materials throughout." Acid-etched glass set into the cabinet doors adds to the ligh sophisticated effect.

The limestone flooring—sans the black river stone—continues through all the apartment's room Walls are painted a slightly lighter color, and ceilings are a still-paler version of the same grayish taup Doors and interior windows are set with a pale, acid-etched glass; millwork is rived oak in an almos black espresso finish. The result, while full of contrast, is not stark. Eating, reading and conversatio areas are cozy, yet uncluttered. The furniture is of Duffy's own design. Sleek pieces with considerab presence, the tables and case goods are clean-lined and rectilinear. Some, like the dining table, incorp rate decorative stainless steel stringing, while others, like the coffee table, are designed for double dut with built-in storage. A desk in the master bedroom has a pale gray leather top, a particular signature Duffy's. Upholstered furniture, like the living room sofa, easy chairs and the dining banquette, has cle lines and generous proportions, the neutral fabric coordinating with the pale walls or with the da wood of other furniture pieces.

Duffy's penchant for designing his own furniture has been growing. On June 17, he introduced a ne line called Direction, which is sold to the trade through Webster & Co. in the Boston Design Cent Direction furniture is clean-lined, but not minimalist. The classically proportioned case pieces are ex cuted in dark woods like mahogany and ebony, with satiny, hand-rubbed finishes. Pieces are often inla with pale leather or brushed stainless steel stringing; some feature hardware that resembles fin de siè French jewelry.

A large master bedroom suite is secreted behind a door, while a small guest bedroom (defined b leather convertible sofa) also functions as a library, a bookcase against one wall. A flat-screen TV mount on a media cabinet creates a partition between the living room and the guest room/library. The televisi conveniently swivels to face either room. A landscape painting demurely decorates the non-TV side.

One corner of the kitchen's angular cooking island, topped in mottled granite, points to the adjacent dining area.

"When I have female guests, I put them in my bedroom and sleep out here so that they can have omplete privacy," Duffy says. " Otherwise, this is an out-of-the-way spot to put up friends, to read or atch TV."

Economy of space and hidden storage mark the home of this admitted "neat freak." Large mirrors set ush into the master bathroom's limestone walls hide many shelves. The bedroom's generous closet ace is invisible behind espresso oak and etched glass. There are books, plants, sculpture, family pho- s and personal mementos, but all are displayed so as to underscore the sense of ordered calm.

"That was carefully planned from the beginning," says Duffy. "This is a brand-new building, and 35 ercent of it was offered as unbuilt space, which is what I wanted. It enabled me to design an interior at has all the elements I need, and without having to squeeze things in around existing construction. or example," he points to the luxurious draperies that fall to the floor in vertically banded bronze, haki and sea blue, "the systems—electrical, climate controls, and so forth—are in the ceilings and alls, and the drapery hardware is completely hidden in the soffits."

One important reason that Duffy wants his home to be user-friendly and easily organized is that he's tting married next summer. This will be the couple's home.

"He visits on weekends, and the space works quite well for two people," Duffy says. "Also, we may ave more room by then. My business is outgrowing the room next door, and I hope to find bigger of- e space nearby."

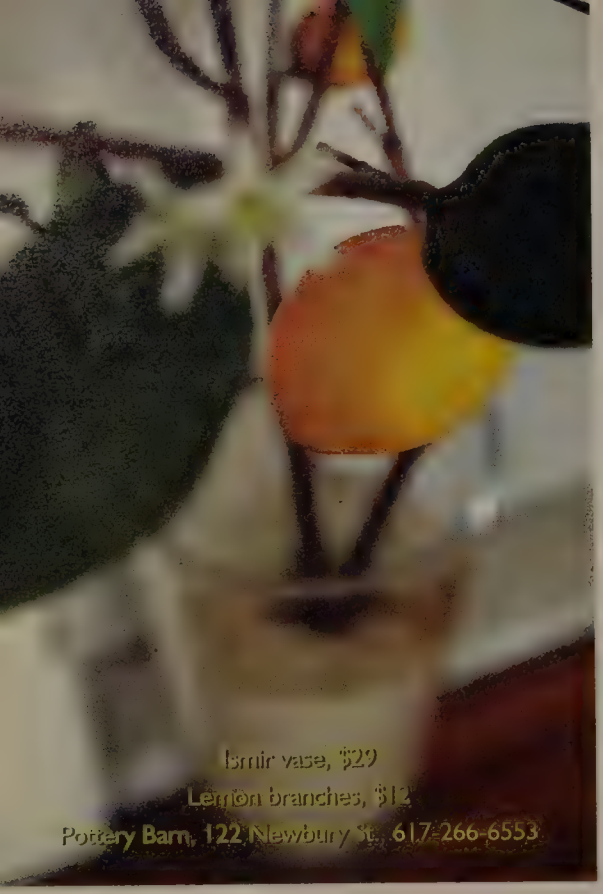
Duffy has lived in the South End ever since he moved to Boston from New York eight years ago, and e says he loves this part of town. "Being this close to work has spoiled me. I don't want to have to go o far." He stands at the window and points to an abandoned red brick industrial building. "Maybe ey'll develop that in time for me to move my office there!"

There is one thing he would change if he could: "I don't have an outdoor room," he says. "No eck, though there are units in the building that have them. And, of course, there's a nice roof garden nd a shared courtyard.

"This," he says, gesturing to an installation on a wall by the apartment's entry, "is my ideal, my fa- rite thing. It has all the elements I want to have in my own space."

At the base of the three-section installation, gently gurgling water falls over a black stone wall. bove it hangs a vibrant painting of grass blades reaching up to a blue sky. Above that, one of Duffy's terior acid-etched glass lights is banded with dark wood.

"This has it all—water, grass and air. It's perfect." IB



The foyer serves the apartment as well as the Duffy Design Group offices.

SIX LOCAL INTERIOR DESIGNERS SOUND OFF ON THE DOS AND DON'TS OF DECORATING.

Frank Roop's Back Bay townhouse serves as a showroom for his modern interpretations of late-18th to 20th-century French-inspired interiors.

Fotene Demoulas residential interiors run the gamut from contemporary to traditional. Her design firm has been in business in Boston for 12 years.

Duncan Hughes' design projects include residential and commercial properties. His firm is located in Boston's South End.

James Swan specializes in high-end residential interiors and has offices in Boston and Beverly Hills.

Susan Sargent is a textile colorist and interior designer. Her line of fabrics, furniture and rugs is available at her two stores, in Boston and Manchester, Vt., which also house her design firm, Bright House Interiors.

Heather Wells' design projects mix contemporary minimalism with traditional forms. She has offices in Boston and Chicago.

With home makeover shows popping up all over the cable channels and interior-design magazines crowding the newsstands, it's clear that we're more obsessed than ever with the way our living spaces look. After all, as life and work become ever more stressful and complex, our yen to feel comfortable and happy in the home we retreat to at the end of the day grows stronger. But if you've never tackled a redecorating project (or if you have, with mediocre results), you might wonder: Where do you start? And how do you ensure that, when the money's spent and the delivery trucks have departed, you'll be happy with your newly feathered nest? We asked six local designers for their advice on all things interior, from hot trends and working with small spaces to what to choose first, where to save cash, and, if you opt to hire a pro, how to find the right one and work productively together. Here's what they had to say.

People always want to know what are the newest trends. What's your favorite?

Frank Roop: My favorite thing right now is clean backgrounds with vibrant colors like citrus or turquoise. Not so much muddy, bright colors, but punchy, jewel colors.

Duncan Hughes: A lot of my clients are looking for comfortable sophistication, natural tones, something that's going to create a warm, serene environment, with softer, more durable fabrics. People are really using their spaces more than ever; they're not just showpieces. So fabrics are much more durable. Lots of people have kids, but they still want the beauty. So there are teflon-processed fabrics.

Heather Wells: Mixing old-world stuff with modern things is a trend now, and I think everyone has a different version of it. They'll take their grandma's sofa and put a modern trim on it, or modern lighting with an antique rug.

Susan Sargent: In terms of color, I've been working with the whole berry/orange palette for the past year or so, and I think that's a really strong palette. Fuchsias, raspberry, orange—not like a Kool-Aid orange, but a really wonderful warm orange. I've added some pink-and-brown combinations. That's a really hot combination right now.

Fotene Demoulas: The newest colors and fabrics and trends seem to be going toward retro electric, with avocados and oranges. But they're more muted than in previous years. My favorite current trend is the 1930s, for its classic and clean lines.

James Swan: My favorite current trend with our clients is that we're moving away from trends. It's that conversation of style versus fashion. A lot of things are hot right now, but our clients want something that's a little more timeless.

We've heard that one thing that stops people from redecorating or buying new furniture is fear of making a mistake. How can buyers avoid making choices they'll regret a year down the road?

HW: Buy big pieces, like upholstery, in neutral colors. Pick whatever your neutral is and buy your larger pieces that way. Do a more traditional wood, like mahogany or walnut, instead of a sycamore or Brazilian cherry. Add color to the room in small pieces. I'd do it in pillows, vases, throws and even artwork.

DH: I'm not very fond of trends, so to speak, in design. I think there are certainly reinventions of classic designs that are relevant today, as long as someone is focused on what they like as opposed to just going with what they see in a design magazine or what their neighbor has.

JS: I always stress that the client be passionate about what they're buying. If they're buying what someone else chose, there's that possibility that they might not like it later. When our clients are passionate about the direction of the room, they tend to still love the things in the room 10 years down the road.

SS: We particularly focus on empowering people to make colorful choices. People are really scared of doing the wrong thing, and I think that's a ridiculous brainwashing. I mean, what's the worst that can happen? Most people who come to us want color. We find that a lot of it is about really trying to feel connected to your choices, getting over the fussy dos and don'ts of decorating. You can do it incrementally, and you don't have to do it all at once.

How do living spaces and design tastes in Boston differ from other towns?

FR: I think design in Boston tends to be on the more traditional side, but I do more modern stuff.

HW: We have an office in Chicago, and I would say the difference between here and there is square footage. Boston tends to be tighter, smaller and more vertical, like townhouses. But in Chicago, we do apartments that are very large, like 5,000 square feet on one floor. In Boston you would never find that.

FD: It's clean, it's less cluttered. The spaces are smaller but they're more multifunctional.

JS: Boston is generally perceived as a pretty conservative town. But what we're finding, to our delight, with our clients is that people are opening up to a fresh new vocabulary. You see it in local retailers—Montage for furniture, Louis for clothes, Good on Charles Street. They're not ignoring the traditions of the past, but they're adding a new approach to design that's unique to Boston.

SS: I've been really surprised how broad the demographic is in Boston. It's a little more casual than New York. It's younger. The "proper Bostonian" ideal is out there, but it's not really the people we see in our business. I think Boston's got a great energy, partly because of the students and the young professionals. They're very open to doing something different. Nobody wants to live in Boston and do that old Boston thing.

What's the biggest misconception people have about hiring a designer?

DH: That the designer is going to come in and impose their ideas and personal tastes on a client and be the temperamental artist. And the client is afraid of losing control of their space. For me, it's about the client and designer coming together to create a really unique space. The biggest compliment for me wouldn't be someone walking into a space and saying, "This looks like a Duncan Hughes interior." I would much rather someone say, "This looks like Joe and Mary." Another misconception is that interior design is only for the super wealthy. I think that many designers today will come in and work with clients to reorganize and limit the number of purchases.

HW: That they're hiring a designer for the designer's taste. I think you should hire a designer to find your taste. A really good interior designer should help you find who you are and leave the space as yours.
SS: I think hiring a designer is terrifying for most people, and I don't think it's even a misconception. [Some] designers have a lot of work to do. They're bossy, they're dictatorial and they spend more money than their clients want them to. That does exist, and the rest of us who don't work that way have to work so hard to overcome that. I went to this store that had all these designers on staff, and they were the snootiest bunch. One designer was outraged because the client had moved the pillows.

What information or direction is most crucial for getting results that match the client's taste?
DH: I give my clients homework, a stack or two of shelter magazines or any kind of design book to look at. I give them two different colors of Post-its—one to mark things they love and one for things they hate. Besides that information, I think it's important to communicate any good or bad experiences they've had with designers in the past. Also, any information on pieces in their own apartment that they really love—things they don't want to part with, like Aunt Betsy's old desk—that we might be able to keep or refurbish. I also like to look at their wardrobe. It gives me a really good idea of what colors they're comfortable with and what their style is.
FR: Generally I like to meet with clients a lot before I get involved with pens and paper, and normally it's learning about how they live and their kids, what kinds of clothes they like to wear, where they like to vacation and their tastes. My job is to come back with something that will please them but is not necessarily something they thought of. Why get a designer otherwise?
HW: I think the first thing they need to do is be honest about their budget. If it's an individual, they need to really share who they are with their designer so the [designer] can read them properly and not try to be something they're not.
JS: I look for—and try to push my clients to tell me—which things are nonnegotiable: "I hate red," or no floral prints or no contemporary art. There are always one or two things that individuals, couples or families are nonnegotiable on.

What's the first thing you take into account when designing a room?
FR: The first thing is to plan the space. I draw a floor plan and plan the furniture layout. Then I design the furniture and cabinetry. Then I get into color. It's almost like a coloring book. You draw all the lines and then color it in.
HW: I look at a series of things—what the function is, if it's going to be used in a formal way or a casual way—so we can pick user-friendly fabrics. If it's going to be used for kids or pets. What are the best qualities for the room—the height, the moldings, the lighting. Highlight the most significant architectural aspect of the room.
SS: The shape of the room, followed by the light. Then the relationship of the room to the rest of the house. Who uses it, what time of day, what's the mood you're trying to achieve?

What are some of the most important things to remember when trying to make the most of a small space?
DH: Shrinking down the scale of the furniture is really a mistake. What you should do is scale down the number of pieces in the room, but keep the proportions the same as a large room. If you do nothing else, remove all the extra stuff in the room. Keep it pared down and simple.
SS: I'm going to keep returning to color, because that's my schtick. There's a very misleading idea that you can't do color in small spaces because it can make the room look smaller. I think color is great for small spaces because it can make them look like little jewel boxes.
FD: Use multifunctional pieces and keep it clean.

What are some of the most common decorating mistakes?
DH: Trying to accomplish too much in any single room. Not choosing your colors properly. Not really thinking through how the colors will work with the furniture or your mood or the feeling of the room.
FR: Not having a game plan. It's really important to have the space planned out. But it's hard to do that without hiring someone who knows how to draw a floor plan.
HW: People tend to buy furniture that's scaled too large. It looks great in catalogs, but in real life, it kind of eats the room. The overstuffed chair and overstuffed sofa can be too large. They're not even that comfortable because they're not ergonomically correct for your body. And people put too many speaking pieces in a room. They'll pick a really vibrant rug, a loud sofa and a loud art piece. They need to pick one thing to get the most attention, and everything else needs to complement that piece.
JS: Not hiring a designer. [Laughs.] That's the biggest one. But beyond that, scale—the size and proportion of the objects going into the room need to be cohesive. Lighting mistakes. Lighting is such an important part of the room. Sometimes I even bring in a lighting designer to get it right.
SS: Overdoing it. We're all so bombarded with shelter magazines and decorating shows, so we see all these perfect interiors where everything is done to a T. I think it's very sterile, and unfortunately, people think their room isn't special because it doesn't look like those rooms. In the other direction, with color, we don't want the room to look like a kaleidoscope. We always encourage people not to get too carried away with color.
FD: Some people doing it on their own don't take into consideration how to get the pieces into their homes. If they're doing a room and they have a couch, and they don't consider the doorways or stairs. Just being aware of getting the pieces into the spaces and whether the rugs are too thick and you have to change the door height.

What's something you shouldn't skimp on when decorating?
DH: Not skimping on the quality of the fabrics is very important. You can try to save money on fabric and have something that looks great on an expensive piece of furniture, but if the fabric is fading after a year, the cost of reupholstering is going to far exceed doing it right the first time. Even a high-quality fabric on an inexpensive chair is much better than an expensive chair with low-quality fabric.
JS: Buy the best upholstered goods that your budget will allow. You'll have your upholstered pieces the longest, and you touch them more than anything else.
FD: If you buy a good sofa it can last you longer than other things. You can always keep reupholstering it down the line or move it into other spaces. A den sofa can become a living room sofa, etc.

What design element should be the biggest investment when working with a tight budget?
FR: Probably a really good sofa.
HW: First, I would say artwork that you really love. Each time you purchase a really significant piece of art it will travel with you and become a part of your life. It sort of charts your path through your life, and furniture doesn't do the same thing unless it's antique or something. And, I would say, get a really good sofa to anchor the room.
SS: I think comfortable upholstery is important, and the price of it has come down so much. Whereas you used to have to spend $5,000–$10,000, now you can get something under $2,000. You don't want to hit the bottom of the line with upholstery. I'm not a big drapery person either. I like the light, so draperies are not something I would spend money on.

What are some hot colors right now? In terms of paint, upholstery and accents?
DH: Browns and blues are a very hot combination right now. I'm also really getting back to neutrals that can be worked with in terms of wall and furniture colors. Adding punches of bright colors that can be rotated seasonally in terms of pillows, ceramics, artwork.
FR: Recently I'm doing a Moroccan-inspired color palette, in more of a modern way. Punchy, deep orange, saturated violet, citrusy yellow, and turquoise are the accent colors, and the background colors to make them pop are celadon, gray-blue and putty.
JS: Right now, fashionable colors are oranges, greens, pinks and raspberries. If we shift and think of colors that carry long-term style, that's all about the individual client.
SS: Berries, and really the whole pink range. Not bubblegum or girly-girl pink, but sophisticated, soft pink, right down to the vivid, saturated colors.
FD: With paints, I think a lot of neutral tones are really hot. With upholstery, textures are playing a bigger part. Fabrics that have some lines going on.

What's a trend that's over or on its way out?
DH: I know that the dark espresso finish on wood, which was the rage for the past few years, is really on the decline.
FR: In general, I see a movement away from all-white rooms, or cream, or beige on beige. I see rooms having more depth. It depends on the project and the client and the site.
HW: I think overstuffed furniture is going out.
JS: Midcentury modern—1950s stuff. It sort of peaked.
SS: Beige. That might be wishful thinking on my part. I think the tide is turning. We see it in our Newbury Street store. People say, "I don't want Pottery Barn. I don't want Restoration Hardware. I want something more fun."
FD: I think overstuffed, slipcovered furniture and chenille.

Final words of advice?
DH: Don't shy away from meeting with a designer to talk about ways your interior space can be more reflective of you. Don't feel obligated to use somebody just because you've met with them once or twice. Make sure above all else that you have a very good rapport with your designer.
FR: Keep an open mind to new ideas.
HW: Take your time. Look through a lot of magazines to figure out what the trends are and what you like most. And find the thread that runs through all the pictures and honor that—that's who you are.
JS: I'm constantly encouraging my clients to see and experience as much as they can. Watch and learn from the environments you're in. If you're traveling in hotels or restaurants, observe. Watch and learn what makes you happy—a certain light fixture, a certain upholstered piece.
SS: When people come to us, we say this should be fun for you. So many people take it way too seriously. You shouldn't be agonizing. Designing your home gives you all kinds of things to connect with it: culture, color. It develops visual and tactile skills. But at the end of it, you should really be having fun.
FD: Have fun. Don't get stressed over it. Have some self-confidence and don't be afraid to take a chance. IB

Easy-to-make pillows brighten up any room.

PRODUCED BY SAMANTHA HOUSE
PHOTOGRAPHS BY OLIVIA GATTI

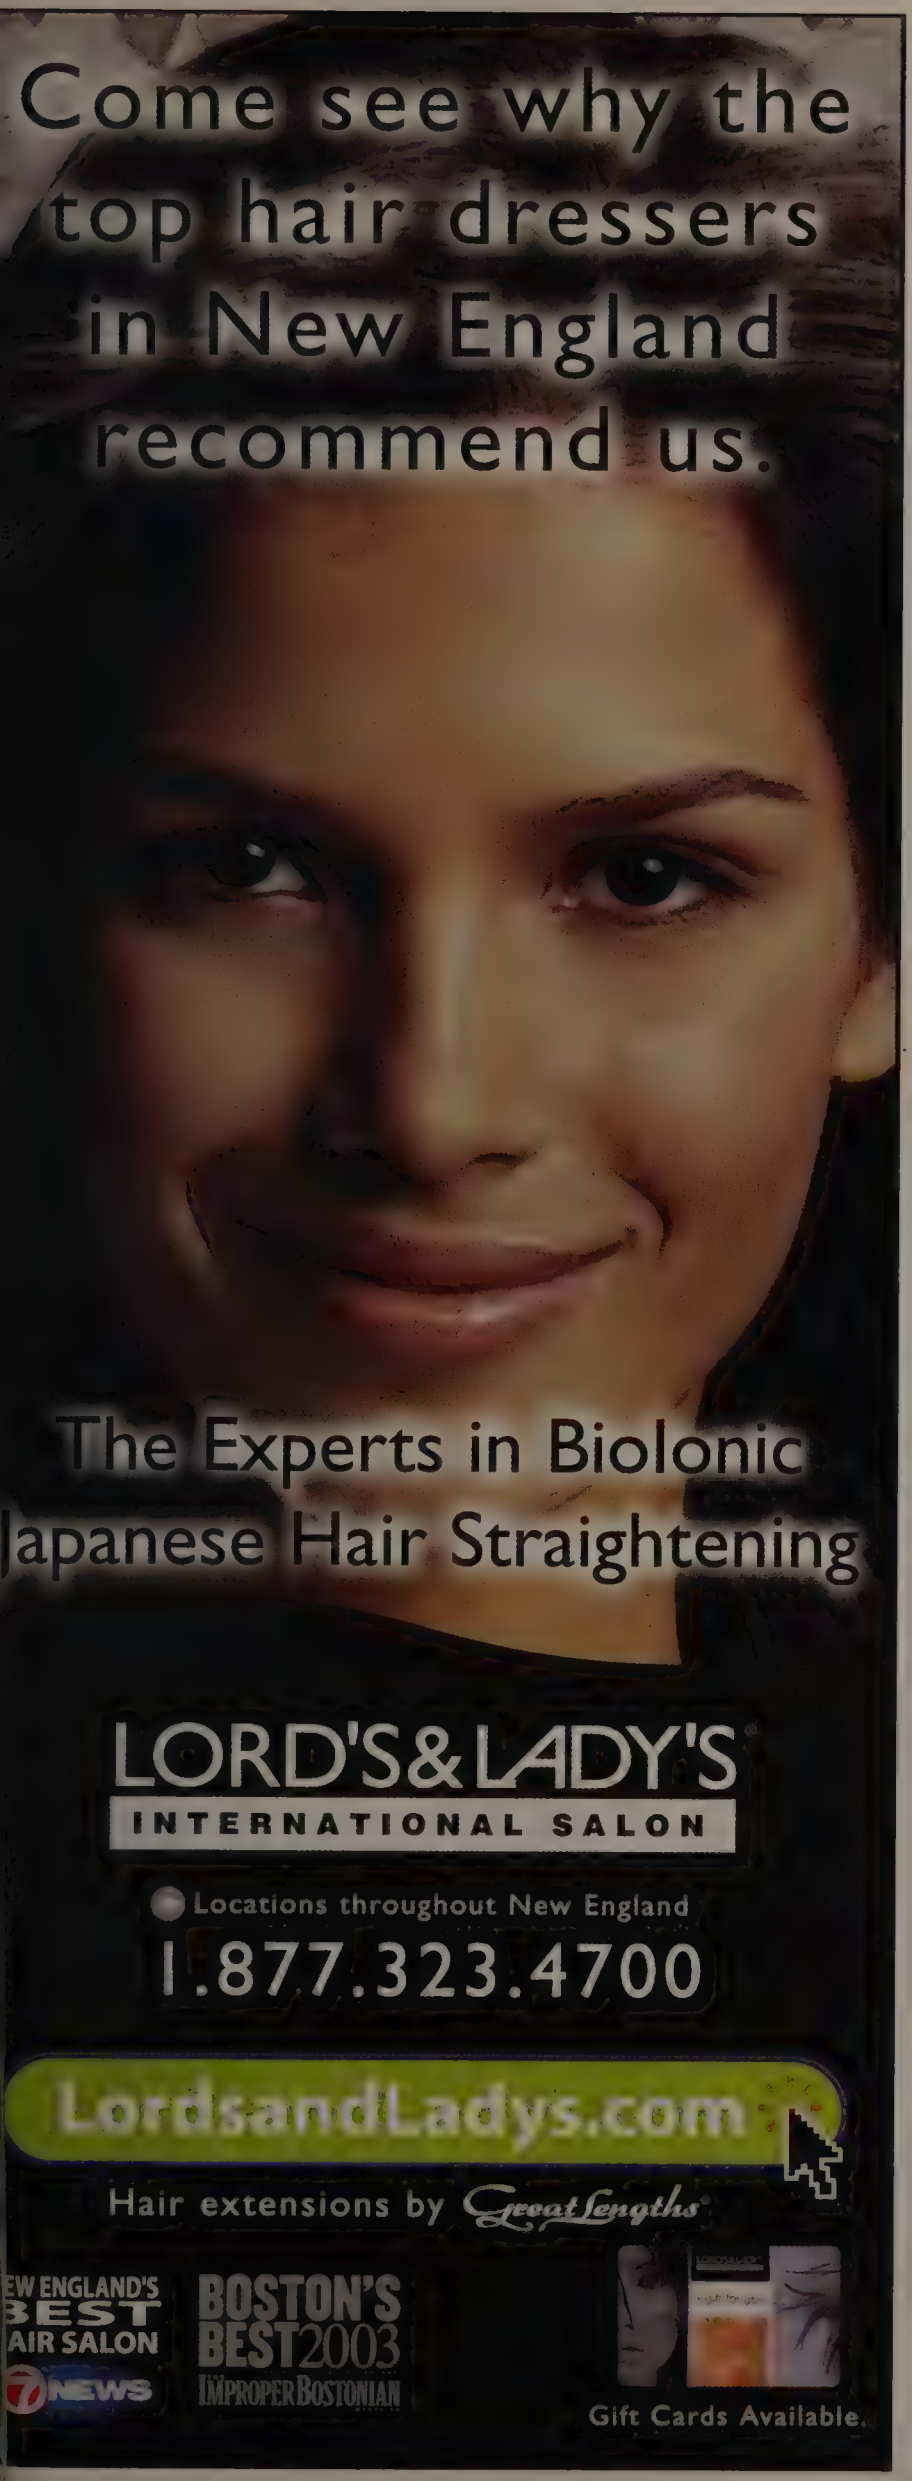
Even if you flunked out of junior high home ec, there's one little craft project you can easily handle (we promise): making your own pillows. Fun fabrics and accessories plus a little creativity can yield bright cushions that will add zip to your space without pinching your wallet. And you don't even need a sewing machine. Here's how to do it.

▲ FLOWER PILLOW

What you need for a 12-inch square pillow:

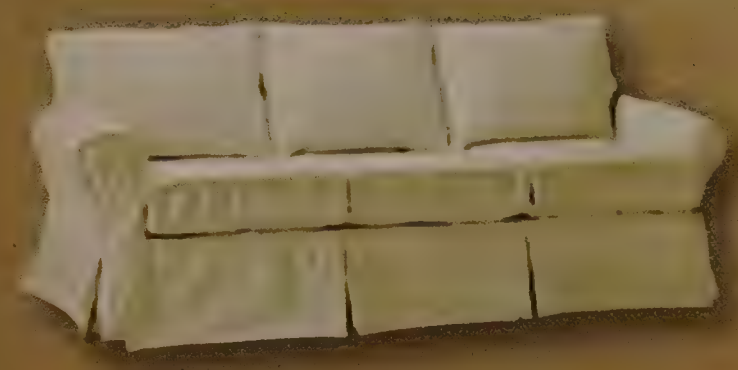
½ yard of fabric (for the pillow itself)
¼ yard of fabric in a contrasting color (for the flowers)
Thread to match each of the fabrics
A sewing needle
Polyester stuffing

1. Begin by cutting out two 14-inch squares of the pillow fabric. Place the squares front to front and sew three of the edges closed with a straight stitch.
2. Sew the fourth side closed halfway. Flip the fabric right-side-out and fill it with stuffing. Using a loop stitch, close the opening.
3. Cut out rectangles in varying sizes (anywhere from 2" x 4" to 5" x 7") in the contrasting fabric to make the flowers.
4. Place a bit of stuffing the size and shape of a cotton ball in one corner of the fabric. Wrap the corner of the fabric around the stuffing and sew the fabric closed at the base of the ball.
5. Wrap the excess fabric around the ball, letting the fabric form in petal-like folds. Secure the folds with needle and thread.
6. Repeat steps 4 and 5 with the remaining squares.
7. Cut out a 12-inch oval-shaped piece from the remaining pillow fabric.
8. Sew the flowers to the oval piece, allowing the fabric to bunch at the stitching to add texture.
9. Sew the oval piece of fabric to the pillow, stitching where the flowers are attached.



▼ BEACHY BUTTON PILLOW

What you need:



A fabric that's finished on one edge (such as the eyelet fabric shown here). Buy about ½ yard for a small pillow, 1 yard for a large one.
A handful of light-colored buttons
Thread in the same color as the fabric
A sewing needle
Stuffing (synthetic or natural)
Ribbon (optional)

1. Cut the fabric into a long rectangle. Sew individual buttons from the top to the bottom of the fabric on the front side. (Make a design or sew them on randomly—whatever you prefer).
2. After sewing the buttons on, fold the fabric in half, with the button side facing in, and match the two short ends. Sew the short ends together using a straight stitch.
3. Gather the fabric on the open end with the unfinished edge, and sew the gathered fabric together. Turn the fabric right-side-out and stuff the pillow.
4. Gather and sew the final finished edge together—or tie a ribbon around it to give it a finished look.

THAT OX IS NO MORON

Dr. Mardy Grothe, formerly of Lincoln, has assembled hundreds of paradoxical quotes, wordplay and "ideaplay" on all subjects in his book, Oxymoronica.

Verbal twists of thrilling self-contradiction, as in irony and paradox, or the curly twins of yin and yang, captivate writer, business consultant and ping-pong-er of words Mardy Grothe. The oxymoron, which weds impossible opposites like the steam on dry ice, inspired the title of the book. Divided into categories like love, politics, the literary life, advice and others, these quotes absolutely nail such topics as the human condition: "Success has ruined many a man" (Ben Franklin). Insults? Playwright Tennessee Williams called writer Truman Capote "a sweetly vicious old lady." In spite of what seems like their slicing of truth, "paradoxymorons" make more sense than plain sense. Fran Lebowitz uttered the sardonic "I figure you have the same chance of winning the lottery whether you play or not," while Victor Hugo offered the beautifully descriptive, "Melancholy is the pleasure of being sad." Some quotes, such as, "We often despise what is most useful to us" (Aesop), are perversely inspiring. Others fall into the mean-but-true genre: "He's the kind of guy who can brighten a room by leaving it" (Milton Berle, describing a contemporary). Oxymoronica, it turns out, sums up most things.

DISTRESS YOUR FURNITURE CHEERFULLY

Andrew Mroczek offers his furniture painting services through the store Home, at 353 Beacon St., Somerville. Call 617-864-4072 or visit the shop Friday through Monday.

Andrew Mroczek, a graduate of the Art Institute of Boston, wants to take your old, bland or perhaps troubled furniture and give it that ironically upgraded look called "distressed." You may have very ordinary furniture in your roommated pad, or for that matter in your fancy house—desks or wooden bureaus, possibly made of seen-better-days mahogany; utilitarian side tables; old boarding-house stuff from Sears—these things can use Mroczek's touch. He strips and primes pieces, then works in layers of colors—white, black, hot and hotter reds—to give them a new-old look. In the deliberately shabby tradition, he paints and irregularly repaints. The effect is, paradoxically, cheerfully colorful and tormented, with bits of almost chipped-looking areas, acceptable dings, slices and other lived-in scars showing through. The charming, now legless, top of an old-fashioned child's school desk makes a sweet computer table, with its little book-nook underneath to hide a keyboard. Shiny glass drawer pulls lighten things up. Mroczek finds orphaned pieces of old mantles that might become shelves or get recycled as an ornamental piece over a doorway, displaying the interesting textures of his technique. Home's Dorinda Jaquith calls some of these appealingly recycled pieces "the little black dress."

LE VIEUX QUARTIER DE ROSLINDALE

18 Birch Street, a shop in Roslindale, sells new and old home and garden items. Open daily except Monday; 617-323-3269.

A tiny street in Roslindale flicks its frisky little salamander tail, offering amusing shops, including Birch. This store combines old and new home and garden items, like sturdy, curly reproduction cast ir grates, great for a stepping-stone doorway or an authoritative decoration. These look as if they'd brin big old house along with them, but they're new. Similarly, the delicate yet solid, tall, round tables green cast-iron with high-perched chairs suggest some old poet-haunted quartier, as does a rusty—a actually old—fence. Ethnic and folk art of the 1940s and '50s—from the U.S. (cheery kitchen clo edged in red) and abroad (wooden cats with exotic faces from Indonesia) sit alongside Indian boxes cycled out of manically joyous tin cans and twisty metal fridge magnets, including an uncompromis rhino. Decoupage light switch plates, one showing a melancholy sepia Arc de Triomphe, emphasize confluence of the old and now. Lamps of some vintage have interesting new shades; hanging lights feminized with delicate fabrics that highlight the romance of illumination. Tiny, pretty pink dishes babies and kidlets are among a selection of junior delights.

SCOLLAY'S SQUARE MEALS

Nostalgic Beacon Hill spot serves up classic fare with some new twists.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Tuna filet mignon in a ginger teriyaki marinade, with wasabi mashed potatoes, wilted spinach and pickled ginger

Corinthian columns and pilasters support the high ceiling of Scollay Square, a new eatery near the crest of the hill on Beacon Street. Building on these architectural flourishes of the former Bellevue Hotel lobby, Scollay Square's owners, Brad Dalbeck and Chris Damian, strive to evoke Boston of a bygone era. The name of their restaurant, emblazoned in an eye-catching neon sign over the open kitchen, summons up Boston's racy tenderloin district, which fell victim to the urban renewal wrecking ball that leveled the old West End.

Shiny hardwood floors; a drop ceiling over the kitchen, raw bar, and part of the dining room; cranberry-hued draperies; art deco glass blocks; dark woodwork, and slender, cone-shaped amber sconces have turned the space into a visually engaging dining environment. Sturdy chairs upholstered in burgundy velvet, and white tablecloths covered by butcher paper, set with heavy tableware, tall-stemmed glasses and absorbent white cotton napkins, add to the ambience. Vintage photographs of Boston in the early 20th century, including one oversize cityscape in a unique, curved frame over the hostess podium, conjure the ghost of Mayor Curley.

Scollay Square's menu offers straightforward, uncomplicated fare ranging from shrimp cocktail to New York sirloin steak, undertaking some interesting and imaginative detours in between. The chef's riff on oysters Rockefeller, oven-fired oysters ($12), delivered a sextet of succulent, briny mollusks that shared their shells with nuggets of Tasso ham, roasted peppers, creamy spinach and perhaps a whisper of Pernod. Although the menu listed Reggiano as an additional ingredient, I did not detect it, which was just as well since the sweet-salty richness of Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese would have overwhelmed the oysters. Skillet-roasted Prince Edward Island mussels ($8), plump, sweet, and impeccably clean, came in a shallow pool of buttery broth with a small ramekin of shallot butter for dipping. In a small but appreciated touch, our waitress brought a spare bowl for disposing of the empty shells. Seared Jonah crab cakes with mixed greens ($9) yielded two delectable patties containing a minimum of filler and a high percentage of crab, redolent of the warm flavor and aroma of sage, all enhanced by a sprightly tomato garnish studded with capers.

Portabella quesadilla ($9), a large tortilla stuffed with smoky, earthy portabella mushrooms, tangy Monterrey Jack cheese and savory roast tomatoes, came with a refreshing side of shredded greens. A substantial, hearty dip of spinach and artichoke hearts ($8), enriched with Reggiano, would have been superb with a different dipping medium, but the accompanying tortilla chips, albeit brightly colored, crisp and fresh, seemed off the mark. Better would have been crudités or even small toasts. Finally, perhaps the most spectacular of the starters, wood-roasted chicken and seasonal vegetable soup ($5) set a new standard for this French country kitchen classic. Anchored in a hearty, intensely flavored chicken stock, this full-bodied, incomparable mélange of pureed vegetables—including carrots, onions, broccoli and red peppers—came in a bowl the size of a small basin. Had I consumed the whole thing, it would have made the remainder of the meal superfluous. A liberal doggie-bag policy, in which every one of our leftovers was carefully packed up for export, made it possible to enjoy the remainder of the soup the next evening for supper, where it served as a graphic reminder that the whole concept of supper, the French souper, comes from the word "soup."

Scollay Square's nine main courses (10 counting the nightly special) included a cider-brined, oven-roasted, double-pork chop ($19), tender, juicy, a medium rare, as ordered. While at first mayed that the chop arrived under a la of unannounced, ominous looking d gravy, I relented when it turned out to l delicious, flavorful reduction of the co ing juices, only slightly thickened. Gri salmon filet ($19), carefully cooked to tain its firm texture and its inviting p color, suffered from its tedious, clichéd sentation atop a mound of mashed p toes. Indeed, the potatoes, redolent of tery lobster, could have—and sh have—stood on their own.

Seared sea scallops ($20), sweet and der, appeared to have been three or large, thick scallops cut into top and tom halves before being seared over a flame, an expedient that preserved t impeccable texture while cooking t through. The result, six or eight half lops, ranged around a risotto cake to

Molten chocolate mini bundt cake with chantilly cream and fresh seasonal fruit

Goat cheese and rosemary crumb–encrusted rack of lamb with a crispy potato cake, grilled asparagus and a merlot reduction sauce ith garlicky wilted spinach, made an at-active presentation. Finally among the ain courses, an order of rosemary-scented mp chops ($26) brought two double-bbed chops, perfectly grilled to a succu-nt, flavorful turn, rare as ordered. Again, owever, the presentation left much to be sired, as the chops arrived propped up on a unappetizing-looking mountain of avy-covered mashed potatoes. Fortu-ately, the gravy covered only the potatoes d not the chops. Unfortunately, it lacked e merit of the shallot-accented sauce at came with the pork.

Scollay Square's extensive wine list fers selections priced as low as $22, th a pricier category of "Intense hoices" that range from near $50 to ore than $100. Almost 25 wines are ailable by the glass, including the apey but pleasant 2002 Hahn cabernet vignon ($6). A major step up in qual-y, the 2000 San Felice "Il Grigio" Chi-ti riserva ($34/bottle), brought a re-ed wine of forward fruit and good acid, arvelous bouquet and a fine finish. mong the whites, the 2002 La Fran-sca pinot grigio from the Veneto ($22) s crisply dry and food-friendly.

From the dessert choices, all priced at $6, we selected the mini chocolate bundt cake and the white chocolate bread pudding. Chocolate mini-cakes, a frequent dessert offering as of late, often suffer from dryness, but Scollay Square's was pleasantly moist, as was its chocolate bread pudding. Both arrived delightfully warm.

Service at Scollay Square suffered from inconsistency. One weekday night, when I dined alone, my waiter seemed distracted and indifferent, and getting his attention proved a chore, even though—or perhaps because—the restaurant was so empty. One of his colleagues was no help, betraying a lack of knowledge and a surprising lack of curiosity that might have moved her to inquire of the chef when I asked her about one of the menu items. On a subsequent Saturday evening, in contrast, our waitress served our party of four with efficiency and grace.

Scollay Square may not aspire to exalted culinary heights, but it gives a solid performance and on its own terms succeeds swimmingly. Serving first-rate food at reasonable prices in an attractive, comfortable space, it constitutes a significant addition to the city center's dining resources, and with a little bit of luck will be around for some time. DISH

As the Grill Turns…

Shake-up…Mix-up…Drink up…

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

In the restaurant business, change comes with the territory. Sometimes, people take on new roles within the boundaries of the local scene. Dina Sonnenshein, who created what is possibly the world's best caramel shortbread cookie while working as pastry chef at UpStairs on the Square, has put away her apron and now handles the books at the restaurant. Jim Becker, the talented chef/owner of the former Rauxa, switched to working the front of the house when he helped chef/owner Laura Brennan open Caffé Umbra as general manager. And Brian Simpson, formerly bar chef at Grill 23, is now managing the new Croma on Newbury Street.

More unusual is an abrupt change at the executive level of a terrifically successful restaurant management company. Yes, it makes sense that American Food Management, the company behind Grill 23 & Bar, Harvest and Excelsior, would promote from within: senior manager Paul Dias is now senior VP of operations; Brian Somers, formerly chief financial officer, is executive vice president; and Christopher Himmel is the new vice president of business development. What surprised a lot of insiders was the sudden departure of partner and chief operating officer Timothy Lynch after a 20-year tenure during which he earned everybody's respect as a dedicated, savvy restaurateur…and a gifted raconteur, as well.

Paul Dias (l) and Christopher Himmel have been booted upstairs at American Food Management.

Officially, managing general partner Ken Himmel, back in Boston after wrapping up the development and opening of Time Warner Center in New York, is devoting himself to running the business full-time as president and chief executive officer. Unofficially, where will Tim Lynch go? Disneyland? Perhaps. With a 4-year-old son and a wife who's tolerated his demanding schedule for a long time, Lynch finally has time to travel with his family. "I'm looking forward to having a good summer of relaxation for the first time in 20 years," he says. Might he write a memoir, thick and juicy as a prime steak? "No, I've forgotten too much," he laughs.

SECOND COURSE

Fish on the outside, Asian on the inside: The Kells in Allston is now specializing in Asian cuisine. Of course, beer has always complemented Asian food, and now you have the option of ordering, say, Thai lobster or moo goo gai pan, even a scorpion bowl off the Polynesian drink menu. Whatever. Just keep the green food coloring far away from the kitchen on St. Patrick's Day.

Elsewhere in Allston, Sunset Grill & Tap owner Marc Kadish is exploring the esoteric nuances of matching beers with the appropriate glassware. If you're a stickler for concentrating the bouquet and preserving the delicate bubbles of an aromatic lambic, you won't be disappointed with its presentation in a tall, narrow, Champagne-style flute. Belgian ales? In a snifter, bien sur. For those of us more intrigued than informed, Kadish is now offering the option of two-ounce "pours" of any of the 112 beers on tap.

Finally, a book that answers the question: How do cannibals prepare their favorite sweet treats? It's called Batter Up Kids: Delicious Desserts. Yum. iB

WINE

Chile's Sensational Carmenere

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

Every once in a while you do find something new under the sun, even in the world of wine. Carmenere is a grape variety from Chile that no one had ever heard of five years ago but is now causing a sensation among the cognoscenti; it makes delicious wine but is just a bit off the everyday radar screen. Chile's got a magnificent climate with a lot of unique natural advantages that make it a great source for flavorful, stylish red wine at everyday pricing. During the last decade we've been importing oceans of it, mostly cabernet sauvignon and merlot. But get ready for the next wave: carmenere.

What does carmenere taste like? If you've ever had a lush, velvety, plummy-flavored merlot but wished it had just a bit more backbone and spice, carmenere is the answer. If you drink big, rich, black cherry–like cabernet sauvignon as a rule but are sometimes put off by the tannic overbite, try a carmenere. In a way it's the missing link between those two superstar grape varieties, harvested a few weeks after merlot, but generally just prior to cabernet. And today it's grown virtually nowhere else but Chile, so it's truly a point of distinction.

This all makes sense when you delve into the grape's history. Although it's no longer part of the vineyard picture there, carmenere originates in France's Bordeaux region, where it was once the second most widely planted variety. Transported to Chile in the mid 19th century, it was mixed up with merlot, which it superficially resembles, and generally mistaken for it until about 10 years ago when grape scientists proved conclusively that carmenere constituted a separate, distinct grape variety. The reason it's no longer grown in Bordeaux is that it's highly susceptible to early-season rainstorms, a common occurrence there that severely reduces the size of the crop. Chile, on the other hand, is noted for mild, dry springtime conditions.

Although I enjoy carmenere year-round, spring and summer are really the ideal seasons. We may be drinking reds all the time now, but many people sensibly shy away from any wine with excessive tannin or alcohol in the throes of a New England summer, especially when dining outside. That's where carmenere, with its intense flavor of dark fruit, cedar and spice but soft, round texture comes in. You can cool this baby down just a bit, and because the tannins are moderate you'll gain in the refreshment department without obliterating the often blackberry-like flavor. So to me a good carmenere's ideal for outdoor barbecuing. And it can be absolutely thrilling with spicy Latin preparations, including chili con carne.

Having said that, the grape is nothing if not versatile and you'll find some carmeneres that are juicier than others, with almost a fruit-punch quality, minus the sweetness; others that are equally sumptuous but more understated, mild and perhaps a bit smokier; and still others that show richly extracted spice and mocha-like flavors with a slightly grittier feel. Price is not always an infallible guide, but the wines in the $8 to $10 range tend to follow the first and second formulae, those over $15 the last, with the many examples in between being anybody's guess. What they all share is a tendency to have very moderate acidity but a long, sustained finish.

One way to get a handle on the kind of carmenere you're buying is to look at the subregion of Chile identified on the bottle. The spiritual center appears to be in the Rapel region, south of Santiago, particularly the Colchagua Valley subdistrict. This area produces fairly full, richer-textured wines. I've tasted somewhat lighter and more elegant wines from some of the coastal regions, including parts of Aconcagua up north. Maipo, the country's classic cabernet district, produces a heavier, sometimes vegetally accented carmenere. As the grape has been attracting attention to Chile because of its uniqueness, it's begun to dominate new vineyard plantings, with many sites in parts of the country that are a bit cooler. This allows ripening to take place over a longer cycle with the result that the wines have more delicate, complex flavor accents. The bottom line is, I've rarely had a carmenere that wasn't at least pleasant, so you're not too likely to go wrong if you try one.

As if teeing off while your friends are watching isn't enough pressure. At the Playboy Scramble Golf Tournament, on June 24 at the Georgetown Club, a pep squad of Playboy Playmates will be hovering over your shoulder, critiquing your slice. The tournament, which anyone can enter (after ponying up $750) brings in golfers, celebs and Playmates to raise money for the Progeria Research Foundation, which fights the premature-aging disease. This year, Saturday Night Live's Seth Meyers, Survivor runner-up Boston Rob and The Real World's C.T. are slated to partake in the festivities. Winners go on to the semifinals in Las Vegas, and the finalists then play at the Playboy mansion in Los Angeles. Even if you can't golf, you can go to the preparty June 23 at Felt, where the Playmates promise to be socializing. The party's open only to golfers until 10 pm; after that the public is welcome. *Georgetown Club, 258 Andover St., Georgetown (978-352-8777). Felt, 533 Washington St., Boston (617-350-5555). Manning the grill at the 2003 Chefs in Shorts event

Tastings: Chefs in Shorts

Every year when June rolls around, local chefs leave their restaurants, exchange their long pants for summer shorts and fire up their grills for a barbecue banquet. The Chefs in Shorts food fest brings together leading local chefs, who set up grills in the grassy outdoor space outside the World Trade Center. Kitchen commandos from some of Boston's biggest restaurants participate—and what's better, they all look like they're having a blast doing it. This year, you can sample treats prepared by chefs including Spire's Gabriel Frasca, Bambara's Tom Berry, Bonfire's Jenny Cates, Sel de la Terre's Michael Rhoads, Kashmir's Harjit Singh, Olives' Todd Winer, Rouge's Andy Husbands and more. Eastport Park at World Trade Center East, 2 Seaport Lane, Boston (617-385-5955). 7–9:30 pm. $60.

Mike Skinner, aka the Streets, performs at Avalon June 28.

MON./JULY 5

Movies: Blue Monday

By the end of July 4th weekend, almost everyone is red-white-and-blued out. It's time to say no to all ancillary barbecues and dinky Roman candle displays, and force the Pops' patriotic polyphony out of your head. We can pretty much guarantee you won't find any of the above at the Coolidge Corner Theatre's Summertime Blues series. Every Monday in July, the Coolidge and WGBH-FM 89.7 combine their efforts to screen a blues-, R&B- or roots music–oriented film preceded by a live musical performance. The program kicks off with an homage to the high priestess of soul Nina Simone, whose deep, bluesy voice and music are often defined as "beyond category." Paul White, a pianist, songwriter, vocalist and former Simone collaborator, opens the show with a performance of three of the songstress' most acclaimed melodies and a talk about her musical philosophies and his experience working with her. Following the musical tribute is a screening of Nina Simone: Love Sorceress. The film captures a 1976 Paris concert that's widely considered Simone's best performance—her musical renditions are feisty and commanding (Simone admitted to being "half high" through the whole thing), and the audience is enthusiastic. Guaranteed to blow The Star Spangled Banner out of your head. 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). www.coolidge.org. 7:30 pm, $10.

MON./JUNE 28

Music: Street Smarts

When The Streets' first CD, Original Pirate Material, came out a couple of years ago, lots of us thought it must be a joke. A pasty young English bloke rapping? Skepticism soon turned to intrigue, and then we were hooked. Mike Skinner, aka the Streets, created a distinctive sound by cobbling together elements of underground UK dance styles such as "garage" and "two-step," and then adding his rapped lyrics on top of the mix. Skinner's songs tend toward the storytelling variety, and his tales of scrappy clubland adventures and inebriated romps are as entertaining as his day-in-the-life vignettes and accounts of morning-after breakfasts. Skinner is adept at switching his train of thought from light and amusing to darkly musing and then back again; but while his subject matter can be gritty and bleak, it's never self-indulgent. The new Streets album, A Grand Don't Come for Free, which Skinner will show off at his Avalon show, is more of the same—fun, stark, cutting and relentlessly catchy. Dizzee Rascal opens. Avalon, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-262-2424). 8 pm, $17.25, 18+.

THU.–SUN./JUNE 24–27

Movies: Universal Films

Between the Boston Film Festival, the Boston Jewish Film Festival, the Independent Film Festival of Boston and the Boston Underground Film Festival, the local film circuit has become a cinephile's dream. One of the newest cinematic celebrations, the Boston International Film Festival, serves up obscure indies, shorts and documentaries shot in locations ranging from right here in Massachusetts to as far away as Namibia.

Lightning Bug screens at the BIFF

Now in its second year, BIFF will screen 114 films. In addition to the many minute-long reels, 2[illegible] feature-length films screen, including Philadelphia Film Festival fave Lightning Bug, starring That 70s Show's Laura Prepon, and Noise with Ally Sheedy. Screenings are at the Hynes Convention Center, John Hancock Hall and the Bill Bordy Theater, and the festival caps off with an awards ceremony and after-party at the Roxy June 27 at 9 pm. (866-468-7619). www.bifilmfestival.com. $10–$150.

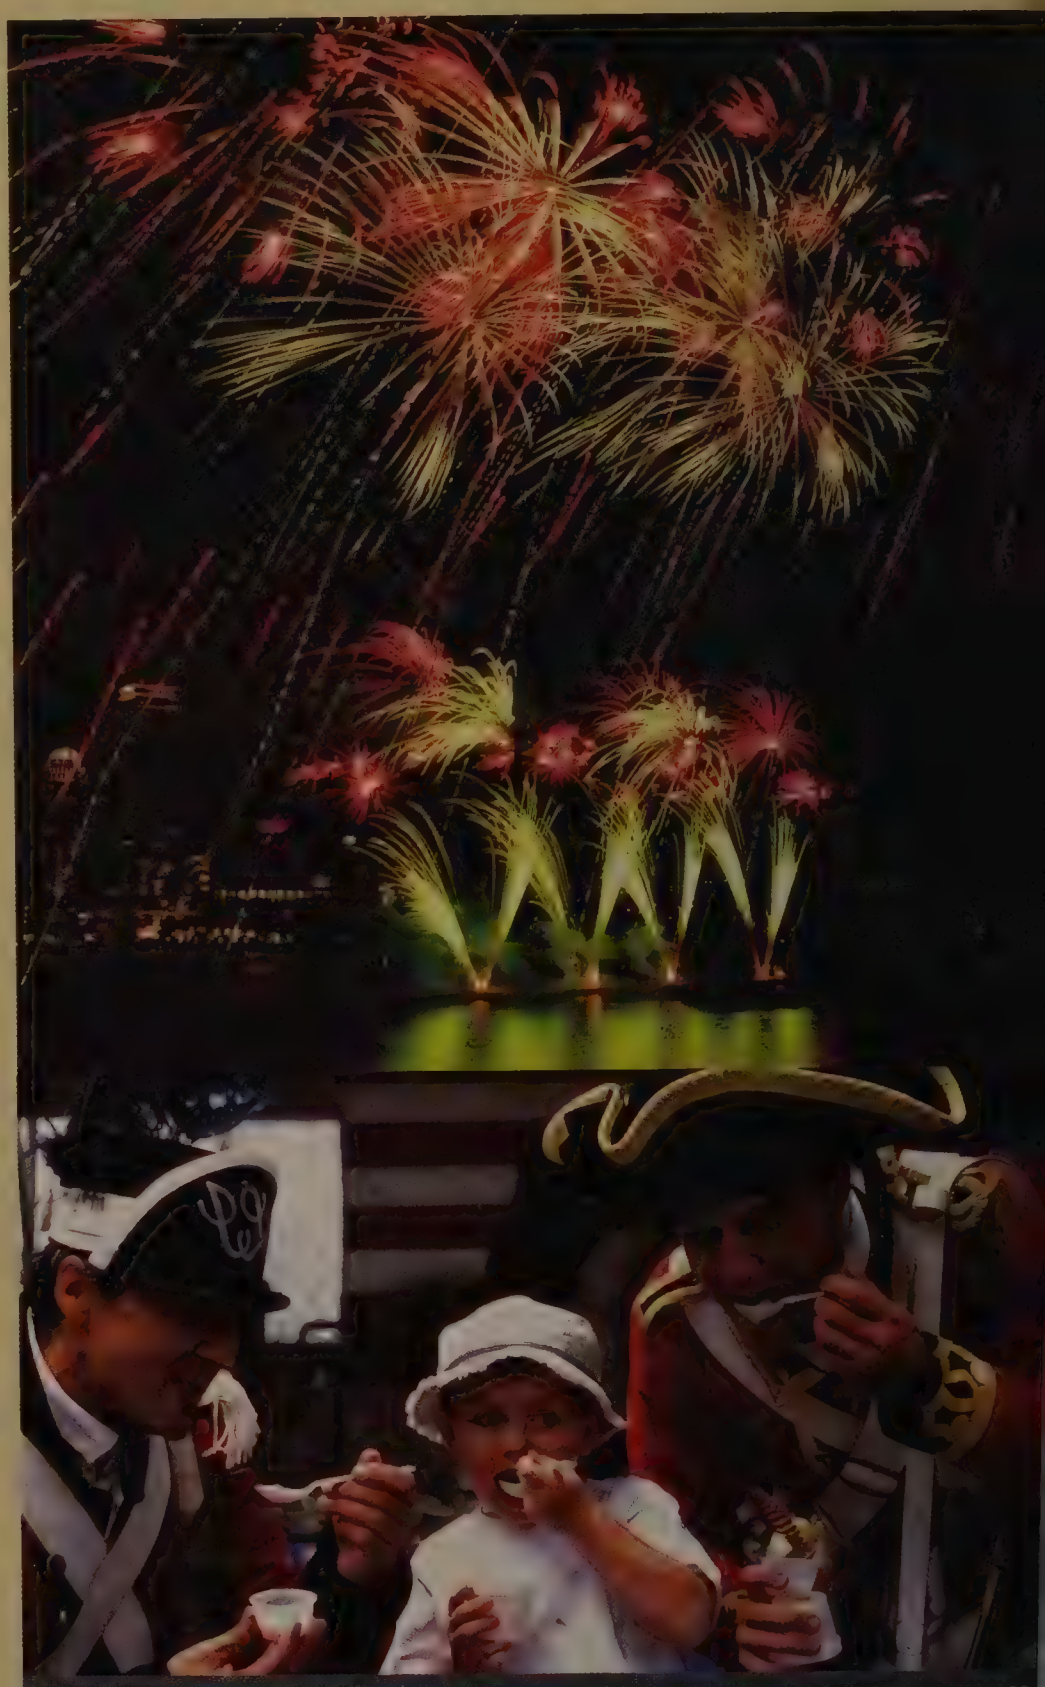
Marching from Old City Hall Courtyard, 45 School St., Boston. www.bostonharborfest.com. 7-8:30 pm. Experience the sound of Revolution-era fife-and-drum music as the Middlesex County Volunteers Fifes and Drums march.

Splash, Sparkle and Stars Cruise
Boarding at Long Wharf Pier, Boston. www.jetsetevents.com. Boarding at 7 pm, cruise departs at 8 pm. $20, advanced ticket sales only. Take a pre–Independence Day harbor cruise featuring a DJ, dancing on the decks and door prizes. Cash bar.



SUNDAY, JULY 4

Pops Go the Fourth
The Hatch Shell, Charles River Esplanade, Boston. www.july4th.org. Concert at 8:35 pm; fireworks at 10:35 pm. Boston's famous Fourth of July concert and fireworks display attracts from 400,000 to 700,000 spectators each year, so if you want a spot of grass in front of the Hatch Shell, arrive early. Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra begin playing at dusk, and at the concert's finale, the shells start to explode over the Charles River in sync with the music. More than 17,500 pounds of fireworks are used, and the show is visible up to three miles away, depending on the weather and sightlines.

USS Constitution Turn-Around
Boston Harbor, Boston. 10 am-2 pm. Watch Old Ironsides make her annual Independence Day cruise out into the harbor from vantage points along the water. If you're interested in being aboard for next year's turnaround, enter the lottery for tickets at www.ussconstitution.navy.mil.

MONDAY, JULY 5

Chowderfest
City Hall Plaza, Boston (617-227-1528). www.bostonharborfest.com. 11 am-6 pm. $7. The 23rd annual Chowderfest pits the city's top chowderhead chefs in a duel to the bottom of the kettle for the title of Top Chowder in the Land. Nearly 2,000 gallons of chowder get served up to thousands of visitors, and admission includes unlimited samplings.

Top: Boston's Fourth of July Fireworks display by Pyros Spectaculars uses more than 10,000 shells. Bottom: Costumed patriots share a snack during last year's Harborfest.

Bore of the Worlds

The Chronicles of Riddick is no Pitch Black.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Nothing like a bloated sequel to spoil a good thing. The Chronicles of Riddick, the sequel to 2000's spunky Pitch Black, takes just about everything that was likeable about that futuristic action-adventure and conveniently forgets it. Pitch Black was compact in setting, Chronicles is literally all over the map. Pitch Black was an ensemble, Chronicles is a vehicle for Vin Diesel, whose career got a big boost from the first. And Pitch Black was modest and resourceful, while Chronicles is over the top and conspicuously thin on the original's cleverness.

Vin Diesel reprises his role from Pitch Black in the new The Chronicles of Riddick

Diesel's Richard Riddick was just part of the mix in Pitch Black, a lone-wolf outlaw pushed toward heroism after the spaceship in which he's being brought into custody is pushed off course and crash lands on a strange planet. That planet happens to be having an eclipse, and also happens to be swarming with nocturnal beasts ready to feast on the ship's passengers in the darkness. Since Riddick's eyes have built-in night vision, he's enlisted by the ship's captain (Radha Mitchell) to help. The female captain got as much of the glory as Riddick did.

The two survivors that Riddick got off of Pitch Black's planet figure in the plot of Chronicles, but Riddick (and co-producer Diesel) aren't sharing the glory here. It's the Islamic holy man (Keith David) he rescued who's responsible for Riddick's return to civilization after five years eluding mercenary bounty hunters (or "mercs," in the movie's parlance). He and a group of other leaders on the planet Helion Prime put out a bounty to have Riddick brought to them, so they can ask for his help fighting off Necromongers, a faith-based race of ruthless conquerors who convert or kill the inhabitants of every planet in their path.

Riddick declines but, in the ever-complicated plot, soon wants his own revenge against the Necromongers, who take him prisoner and try to do all sorts of nasty things to him (involving something called a "mind regression"). The Necromongers' Lord Marshal (Colm Feore)—who's part evil Pharaoh, part Hitler and part Donald Rumsfeld—takes an immediate dislike to Riddick, and the feeling's mutual. But writer-director David Twohy, who's been so good at milking drama from compact tales like Pitch Black and the more recent Below, helms Chronicles like an ADD patient. In the hyper plot, his hero soon escapes from the Necromongers but gets captured by the same sleazy merc (Nick Chinlund) who brought him in at the movie's start (the merc never got paid, thanks to Riddick). The merc returns him to the prison planet Crematoria for a hefty reward. It's there that Riddick meets up again with Jack, the boyish adolescent girl from Pitch Black who, despite becoming a killer thanks to her rage from being abandoned by her hero Riddick, now looks like a beach volleyball player and goes by the name Kyra (and is now played by (Alexa Davalos). Ultimately, everyone heads back to Helion Prime for a big showdown.

Are you getting all this? There's even more clutter in the cast of characters. Twohy has peppered his movie with British actors, as if that alone would give his script dramatic heft. Among them are the Necromongers' Dame Vaako (Thandie Newton), a Lady Macbeth wannabe plotting for her warrior husband (Karl Urban) to usurp the Lord Marshal, as well as Ariel (Judi Dench), an "elemental" (don't ask) whom the Lord Marshal keeps around because she knows something about a prophecy that he would be killed by a Furyan (which turns out to be Riddick's race).

In fact, clutter is the dominant feature of The Chronicles of Riddick: monstrously ugly sets, overripe dialog, scenery-chomping acting and overly elaborate costumes. The armored male Necromongers look like rejects of hood ornament designs for 1940s roadsters, and the Wonderbra budget here may have exceeded the entire outlay for Pitch Black (Newton wisely makes sure her pecs aren't overshadowed by Diesel's). Meanwhile, as has been the case since Pitch Black and Saving Private Ryan, the more you see of Diesel, the less effective he is. He's essentially doing tired, 1980s Arnold Schwarzenegger schtick here, making tough-guy quips and slaying dozens at a time. While the quips are occasionally effective, the fight scenes are an unimaginative drag, and the notion of Riddick as a "reluctant hero" loses value when he triumphs over long odds every 10 minutes. The idea of Pitch Black giving way to such an uninteresting sequel is hard to swallow too. iB

Baadasssss! ★★
Mario Van Peebles has dad Melvin's cigar-chom ing bluster down pat, but what ensues in this sto of the making of Melvin's revolutionary Swe Sweetback's Baadasssss Song (1971) is a pretty sta dard story of indie-filmmaking hardship. Wh indie-film success story didn't struggle to make en meet, keep on schedule, find distribution and g noticed? Mario's script tries to add twists to t story—some psychedelic touches, a nay-saying alt ego for Melvin and a subplot about Melvin's rel tionship with young Mario (Khleo Thomas)—b Baadasssss! never really finds an interesting cin matic perspective on its events. Sweetback itself ar Melvin's later Classified X cover similar territo better. (At Kendall Square.)

Coffee and Cigarettes ★★★
The short films in Jim Jarmusch's amusing colle tion, made in dribs and drabs over the last 18 yea all involve characters sitting around indulging in namesake objects. The movie repeatedly celebrat pairs of things that go well together, whether i those characters, coffee and smokes, black ar white, twins, Abbott and Costello or, to referen one of the soundtrack's songs, crimson and clov There's Steven Wright and Roberto Benigni's a surd opener, Tom Waits and Iggy Pop trying to ou "outlaw" each other, Joie and Cinque Lee havi their ears bent by a Memphis waiter (Ste Buscemi) with an oddball Elvis theory, and heal nuts GZA and RZA (from Wu Tang Clan) comi upon caffeine nut Bill Murray, among others. T movie unfolds in cool surroundings and with co music, from the Pharaohs and the Stooges Funkadelic. Its world is a nice place to be and, u like most movies, it celebrates stripped-down rea ism and individual self-expression. (At Coolid Corner and Harvard Square.)

The Control Room ★★★
Startup.com co-director Jehane Noujaim's new doc mentary about Qatar-based Al-Jazeera, the Ar world's cable news channel, is fascinating—not ju for its behind-the-scenes glimpses into the netwo but because it will make you question any media ou let's objectivity. Looking at differences between A Jazeera's coverage of the war in Iraq and the Weste media's coverage, you'll gain respect for Al-Jazeer because it showed the horrors of the violent war th Western networks would not. In addition, much the analysis that its reporters relate to Noujain camera has turned out to be accurate. But, of cours Al-Jazeera is appealing to an audience, just as Wes ern networks are, and the movie is a reminder of ho all news coverage is shaped by cultural and politic perspectives that judge what's important enough report and what isn't. (At Kendall Square.)

The Day After Tomorrow ★½
Wait a second. Isn't this big-budget, fake-dang spectacle the sort of movie that was no longer ne essary and just too plain crass to produce followi Sept. 11? I guess not. This coldly efficient disast movie about global warming whittling at the pol ice caps, throwing the climate out of whack a launching a new ice age is full of cheesy subplot clunky dialogue and the supremely stupid plot scientist Dennis Quaid walking from Philly to Ma hattan in a 15-foot-of-snow, sub-sub-zero-temper ture, worst-in-10,000-years storm to rescue teen s Jake Gyllenhaal. (Will someone please let him pl an adult already?) (At Boston Common, Fenw and suburbs.)

De-Lovely ★½
I don't know why this tin-eared Cole Porter biogr phy acts so self-satisfied. It includes a dig at the hea ily fabricated 1940s Porter biopic that miscast Ca Grant as the songwriter, and it acts totally liberate because it deals with Porter's homosexuality, unli its predecessor. But this movie feels fabricated, co promised and just plain confused too. (Is castin Kevin Kline any less contrived than Grant?) A though Porter's gay romances are covered, the lovers are rather anonymous, while we're supposed think the "love of his life" is the chummy wife wi whom he had a marriage of convenience (a shr Ashley Judd). Meanwhile, director Irwin Winkl can't decide whether to go the postmodern Moul Rouge route for the many musical numbers, or to faithful to the song's time period—so we get half them done faithfully, and the other half with th "stunt casting" of Robbie Williams, Alanis Mor sette and Elvis Costello, among others, croonin The top? Hardly. (Opens July 2.)

life after she comes to, her son goes to [illegible] to make sure she never learns that her Communist country doesn't exist anymore. This [illegible] premise yields some amusing moments, but also some disappointing ones. Unlike in Billy Wilder's brilliant One, Two, Three (which covered similar territory after the wall went up), the comedy here never quite hits high gear because the story tempers the humor with shades of drama. But the characters' family drama never becomes as memorable as the premise. (At Kendall Square.)

Howard Zinn: You Can't Be Neutral on a Moving Train ★★★

The moviemaking is not nearly as interesting as the subject. But this portrait of the historian, activist and author (A People's History of the United States) gets by on Zinn's appeal. Tall, angular in the face and ready to stand up for the causes he believes in, Zinn is a real-life Atticus Finch. The movie chronicles Zinn's early years working in a shipyard and as a bomber during World War II, covers his years teaching at Spelman in Atlanta and at BU (where he led protests, respectively, for civil rights and against the Vietnam War) and follows him today, speaking out against the war in Iraq and talking to students about the American history their textbooks ignore. (At the Coolidge Corner.)

Mean Girls ★★

With a comic tone pitched somewhere between Heathers and Clueless, writer and co-star Tina (Saturday Night Live) Fey's comedy comes off like a watered-down version of both—not as savage as the former nor as stylized as the latter. Perhaps the problem was shoehorning the story to appeal to the preteen audience of star Lindsay Lohan. She plays a 16-year-old who's been living in Africa with her zoologist parents and is now entering a conventional high school for the first time. She gets taken under the wing of the school's popular girls and soon becomes consumed by the vain, territorial teen princesses' wicked ways. While respectable (and respectful of its audience), Fey's anti-gossip, pro-sisterhood tale is long-winded and not all that funny. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Saved! ★★

You'll find no argument from me about this comedy's message, as it pokes fun at the repression and hypocrisy of religious fundamentalism. And the cast, playing students at American Eagle Christian High School, includes Jena Malone, Patrick Fugit and even Macauley Culkin and Mandy Moore doing some of their best work (love the end-credits duet of the Beach Boys' "God Only Knows" by Moore and co-producer Michael Stipe). But director and co-writer Brian Dannelly has made such a simplistic and smug movie that it's really only preaching to the converted, and you get the feeling he thinks his movie is much more outrageous than it really is. The film is only slightly less self-righteous than those it mocks. Check out the documentary Hell House, about the scare tactics of a Dallas Pentecostal haunted house, for the real thing. (At Kendall Square.)

Still, We Believe: The Boston Red Sox Movie ★★★

It's good to see the Red Sox get some attention—you hardly hear anything about those guys these days. Surprisingly, this documentary about the Sox' 2003 season manages not to be redundant, because it focuses on eight different fans, most of whom are pretty colorful. My favorites are Brockton realist Jermaine, inseparable East Boston diehards Erin and Jessamy and, last but not least, Watertown pessimist "Angry Bill." His mood swings (over the course of a game, an inning or even an at-bat) are priceless, and something with which every Sox fan can commiserate. There's a lot of pain going on, especially come Game Seven against the Yankees, but this is a pleasure to watch. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Super Size Me ★★★

See Morgan. See Morgan eat only at McDonald's for 30 days. See Morgan's weight balloon, his cholesterol shoot up and his liver start to break down. Director Morgan Spurlock, sort of a lighter (and lighter-touch) Michael Moore, serves up his McBinge very amusingly, in order to expose the poison of American fast food. He plays the role of guinea pig with such a commitment and sense of humor that the rather depressing message of Super Size Me goes down easier. Whether Spurlock intended it or not, the larger picture of this country that his movie paints is a frightening one of total decadence, self-indulgence and slavishness to profit and instant gratification, at the expense of common sense and humanity. (At Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Troy ★★½

Sword-and-sandals epics like this Trojan War movie are always a little cheesy, and this one is no different. The arch dialogue and "hey, look at these expensive sets!" feeling are to be expected, as are the CGI hordes of battlers. But not the fact that half the action with the star (Brad Pitt as warrior extraordinaire Achilles) is just plain goofy. Yet Wolfgang Petersen's movie can impress, especially in the showdown between Achilles and Eric Bana's Hector. That crucial scene is well shot and imaginatively scored, and unlike most fight scenes these days, it's not confusing. Meanwhile, Brian Cox brings some Yosemite Sam rootin'-tootin' fire to Agamemnon—the Greek king who finds a convenient excuse to stage an invasion (doesn't that sound familiar?)—and Peter O'Toole adds class as Trojan king Priam. But listless German actress Diane Kruger as Helen, the face that launched a thousand ships? Not likely. (At Loews Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Do the Evolution

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Few songs have detonated on rock radio recently with the impact of Incubus' "Megalomanic," fueled by Mike Einziger's dive-bombing guitar riffs and Brandon Boyd's agitated chorus: "You're no Jesus, you're no Elvis, you're no answer!" The song's video has also generated election-year controversy for the way it juxtaposes imagery of Jesus, Adolph Hitler and a George W. Bush look-alike.

"All of a sudden, the song took on this strong political meaning, which was fine by us, but that wasn't originally the intent of the lyrics or the song," says Einziger, who gives sole credit for the video's concept to director Floria Sigismondi. "Lyrically, the place that Brandon is coming from is that he's sort of a social observer."

Not that the Incubus view of the White House is pretty. "Bush is awful," says Einziger, whose band plays July 2 at the Dunkin' Donuts Center in Providence, R.I., and July 3 at the Worcester Centrum Centre. "He needs to be out of office at all costs. But we're musicians. We're not trying to be politicians."

In any case, MTV has taken more kindly to the Sigismondi-directed video for the group's new single "Talk Shows on Mute." Building on the song's Orwellian references, that video depicts people as animals on a TV studio set. "It covers some scary, dark subject matters," says Einziger. "But the video's kinda humorous, so it's a nice contrast."

When it comes to contrast, there is a marked difference between A Crow Left of the Murder, the new Incubus CD that launched those singles, and the band's previous two albums.

On 1999's Make Yourself (with its breakthrough hits "Drive" and "Pardon Me") and 2001's Morning View (which gave rise to "Nice to Know You" and "Wish You Were Here"), Incubus got more in touch with female fans though layered acoustic guitars and frontman Boyd's sensitive charisma. "I like to indulge myself and say that it's all about the music," says Einziger. "I'll just keep my head in the clouds that way."

However, the Southern California quintet flies in a new direction on the more aggressive and up-tempo A Crow Left of the Murder. "Improvisation and spontaneity are very important, and there's much more of that on this record than any of the records we've made recently," the guitarist says from a London tour stop. "Our early recordings were a lot more immature and scatterbrained, but there were a lot of spontaneous things happening. It was fun to make those recordings. This record embodies the same spirit as that."

He adds that the CD was "the most natural and effortless record we've ever made"—and the fastest, taking only two weeks for the basic tracks, and less than that for mixing. "We were all in the same room playing together live, and that's what makes up the body of the record, having it be really raw and having all the mistakes in there."

Producer Brendan O'Brien, best known for his work with Pearl Jam, facilitated the process. "He loves to do things really quickly," Einziger says. "He doesn't like to sit around and think about things too hard."

O'Brien's extensive collection of guitars, including a pedal steel and the hammered dulcimer–like guitarophone, were also an attraction to Einziger. "He's just got all these strange instruments and we had a really great time."

The guitarist also credits new Incubus bassist Ben Kenney, formerly of hip-hop group the Roots, for his role on the record. "Ben's actually a much more skilled guitar player than I am," he says. "He's always got a million ideas for changing things around or switching rhythms or chords."

Incubus benefits as well from the atmospheric presence of DJ Kilmore (Chris Kilmore) on turntables. "He comes up with all these strange noises and ethereal soundscapes, then he puts them all down onto vinyl and integrates them into our songs, in the right places at the right times," Einziger says. "It adds another sonic element."

However, the group's core chemistry comes down to Einziger, Boyd and drummer Jose Pasillas, who have been friends since grade school in Calabasas, Calif. Along with original bassist Dirk Lance, they started the band during their sophomore year at Calabasas High, influenced by Primus and the Red Hot Chili Peppers, and graduated in 1994. Incubus released its first CD in 1995 and grew from there, playing clubs and festivals as diverse as Ozzfest, Lollapalooza and Moby's Area: One.

"I couldn't imagine what it would be like being in a band with people that I didn't have a personal relationship with," Einziger says. "It's a rare thing to find people you like on a personal level and want to spend your time and energy with anyway, to go on and travel the world and make music together. We feel very fortunate." iB

RECENT CORRESPONDENCE FOLLOWS.

Jim F., Biking on Berkeley with Porn, Memorial Day

It's always great to see you, but I should have taken you up on your invite to watch your friend compete at Jacques. I don't want to be a Haitian stalker, but would love to talk over drinks. Or drink over movies. Or compare notes on your edgy reviews. Or talk more about happy endings. Nice to keep bumping into each other, but wish I had a way to reach you—I even tried Berlin boi, but he couldn't help. E-mail's much more reliable. Write to Scott and watch out for those late fees!

For Jen

I had a crush on you two years ago when you were a waitress at Our House. Then we ran into each other on the D Line one night about six months later. I didn't have the guts to ask you out either time. So I've been kicking myself since that recent Saturday afternoon when I walked right by you on the corner of Boylston and Exeter. I didn't recognize you until a minute later, by which time you had gone! Write me if you'd like to meet.

—Mike, mk2702@hotmail.com

Red Sox Player at Vox

This message is for the Red Sox player I met at Vox May 8. The Red Sox had beaten Kansas City 9–1 that night. Your married friend named Ian from Tampa introduced you to my friend and I and we all left Vox together and walked over to Saint. I gathered it was difficult for you to talk at Vox as you had a drunk groupie all over you who accidentally pushed me into a wall. When we finally made it to Saint, after a while you went to the bathroom. I took the opportunity to ask Ian what you were really like and if you (Mr. Red Sox) ever go on normal dates or meet normal girls. Your friend Ian vouched for you and said you were a "stand up guy" and do have a hard time meeting "normal" girls. Thinking I'd seized the moment to exchange e-mails or cell phone numbers with you, Ian said you had disappeared. That left me to rely on Ian to give my number to you, but I don't think he shared it with you. Maybe he did give you my number and you just took me for another groupie. I thought you were nice, very cute and I especially liked your shy demeanor. I had no idea who you were until Ian told me, but then again I am sure you are just a regular guy. I am really tired of Boston bars and immature guys and I am starting to think meeting a good man in this town is a lost cause.

If you remember me, Mr. Red Sox: I am petite with long, blonde hair, was wearing jeans and a white flowered tank top. By the way, Ian should still have my cell number programmed into his phone (not to be confused with my girlfriend's number he took as well). Here is my e-mail, and I remember your name. I am not a groupie: Take a chance.

Risa

At first I thought you were a dream. A stunning, black-haired Asian beauty with a witty sense of humor, sharp fashion sense, sexy body and incredible smile. I was right. You are a dream—a real-life nightmare. Time spent with you was moments of pure ecstasy for me. You showed me what it was to truly love life—and in the blink of an eye you were gone. You stopped returning my calls, you refused to see me. Then recently, I saw you walking out of Whiskey Park in the arms of another man. I watched as he pinned you up against his Range Rover and kissed you. You looked at him in a way that broke my heart. If you would only give me a chance, I know you would one day look at me in the same way.

Midnight Coffee Goddess

To the goddess in the white dress at Dunkin' Donuts on Harvard Street in Allston. It was near midnight, June 4. You were with two of your friends. I walked in before my shift to get my usual iced coffee. You have a nice tan and brown hair. I had the short hair and the silver tie. We exchanged glances, and if I weren't due back at the office so soon, maybe we could have exchanged numbers. Your posture as I was stepping into my car suggested that it was spring and that you have been holed up all winter in your apartment. You melted the ice in my coffee and believe me my straw was standing straight. Java on me!

Kelly

Your name was Kelly, or at least that's what your name tag said while you were at an awards dinner at the Harvard Club June 3. You had on a metallic, light green shirt, black skirt, and had legs that went all the way up. Your eyes were dark as water at night, and I fell in. Only it was my stomach that fell. You resembled the young actress Rachel Leigh Cooke, only more beautiful, with short, black hair. I served you a gin and tonic, your only drink. When it was over, you and a friend took the elevator down, along with my hopes of meeting you. I'd say the odds of you reading this are one in a million.

Tight Pants at Mass. Ave.

This is to the curly-haired man who wa writing neatly in a very tiny notebook and most probably looking at me on a rainy June 6 at the Mass. Ave. T statio around 10 pm. I was fidgeting with my umbrella and pacing impatiently, but only because I knew you were looking me and I wanted to be interesting. My hair matched yours, but only because the weather. We waved to one another once I got on the train, which prompte me to burst out laughing till at least Stonybrook. I need to know: What wer you writing in that notebook?

Was That Your Green and White Umbrella...

...Or were you just happy to see me? On Friday, June 11 at around 5 pm, y and your friend were waiting for the Red Line train at South Station. You had dark hair and a great smile. I h blue-gray eyes, a blue pinstripe shir and caramel-colored skin. I carried red bag on my lap. As it happened y sat across from me while your frienc took the seat next to me on the trai As you and he conversed, our eyes k meeting. Coincidence? I hope not. Sadly, I had to get off at Park Street was hoping you would too, but you didn't. Can we find out what could have happened if you had?

Lame-Ass Friend

We met at Davis Square when I was coming home from a work party wh it seemed I was the only one makin the trip from the couch to the fridg and back. I told you and your frienc that we'd missed the last train, and suggested that we split a cab. It tur out to be the funniest cab ride hom ever...that I've remembered, anywa Between the repeated questions an the cab driver's conversation with "wife," I almost pissed myself. You suggested hitting up the Foggy Gog for late night, but your friend said even a car full of Playboy Bunnies $500 wouldn't stop him from goin straight to bed, so we parted ways. hope your friend had a good sleep. Regardless, I thought you guys wer the most fun people I've met since moved here a year ago, and I'm al out for a good laugh, if nothing el let's split a cab again sometime. Thanks for the laughs.

rockie horoscope

CANCER JUNE 21–JULY 22

Abrasive Mars leaves Cancer on the 23rd and takes a fair amount of the aggravation you've been subjected to since Mother's Day with it. It could also steal some of your assertiveness, so if your sharp edge seems dull, that's the reason. However, an increased dose of creativity from the life-sustaining sun should compensate for loss of Martian fire. Besides, you won't be as prone to accidents, fevers or temper tantrums. Achieving a happy medium between your purely personal agenda and other people's expectations might be the best birthday gift you get.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Group activities and friendly socializing occupy center stage for a while longer. Then your sun ruler tends to make it more comfortable for you to hide out and let your unconscious or even cosmic consciousness take over. The weeks before your birthday often serve as basic training, a way to get into psychic shape for the program you intend to implement after the sun gets to Leo. This year, you may be experimenting much sooner than that, because as of the 23rd, courageous, impulsive Mars transits your sign for the first time in two years.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Remember "inner and outer directed"? Well, with so many personal planets at the top of your solar chart and expansive Jupiter in Virgo, it'll be hard to come up with an excuse to stay home and contemplate your navel. Unless you're dragging a dead horse or a repressed memory out of a subterranean closet, introspection is simply not a part of the Virgo summer program. Fun in the sun with friends, career counseling, even an attraction to an off-the-wall romantic figure is more like it.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Given your present circumstances, an optimistic and enthusiastic attitude may seem inappropriate. But while you're being urged to rise above the hardships caused by frustrating Saturn in your Cancer midheaven, why not go for whatever gusto you can muster? Lucky Jupiter will be sending positive, albeit occasionally over-the-top manic, energy your way for about another month. Consider this interlude as training for the beneficial opportunities you'll be offered once Jupiter enters Libra in September.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

The emphasis is not entirely on finances; still, most of the planetary activity is focused on what you desire, already possess and share with significant others. Although the bank could turn out to be the most significant of that lot. Refinancing? Not-very-subtle changes start to happen once your Mars co-ruler enters dramatic, stage-stealing Leo on the 23rd. If you need (we're way beyond want) to perform, now would be a very good time to strut your stuff. In another four weeks, when both your Mars and Pluto rulers align, you should be in top form.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Triviality or transcendence? You could be heading down either path since the dualistic Gemini new moon drew its energy by opposing 28 Sagittarius, aka the Galactic Center and Great Attractor. Regenerative Pluto in your sign is calling for transformation; the various Gemini planets are pushing diversification. If you're looking for a clue, you're out of luck or else are relying too much on it. Since your Jupiter ruler is caught in the crosshairs, don't count on much more from him than promises and proselytizing.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Whatever friction or heat you've been feeling from either business or your life partner should subside once irritating and irritable Mars leaves Cancer, your cosmic implement, on the 23rd. Happily or, if you've been getting laid a lot during the transit, unfortunately, it'll be two years before horny Mars comes around again. What to do in the meantime? Strengthen the obviously beneficial aspects of the relationship; appreciate its mundane, yet comforting and comfortable existence; and stop squawking.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Fun in the sun, team sports, kidding around with the kids—'tis the other season to be jolly. For the next few weeks, your heart chakra, aka your solar fifth house, will be lit like a Christmas tree. How long you keep the bright lights and warm glow going depends on how soon you have to assume more responsibilities or get back to the daily grind. Try to postpone that day so that affectionate Venus will have enough time to attract even more admirers, wide smiles and advantageous social situations.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Lose yourself in the art, make your friends' home your own and vice versa, prepare an exotic meal and share the recipe, coin another definition of "creature comfort." While there may be some minor provocations occurring in your daily life—except for the obvious career concerns that mid-March birthdays can't seem to resolve—Fish are finding favor, maybe even getting just rewards for their smarts and good taste. Enjoy this period of true relaxation and recreation so that you can regenerate, both physically and emotionally.

ARIES

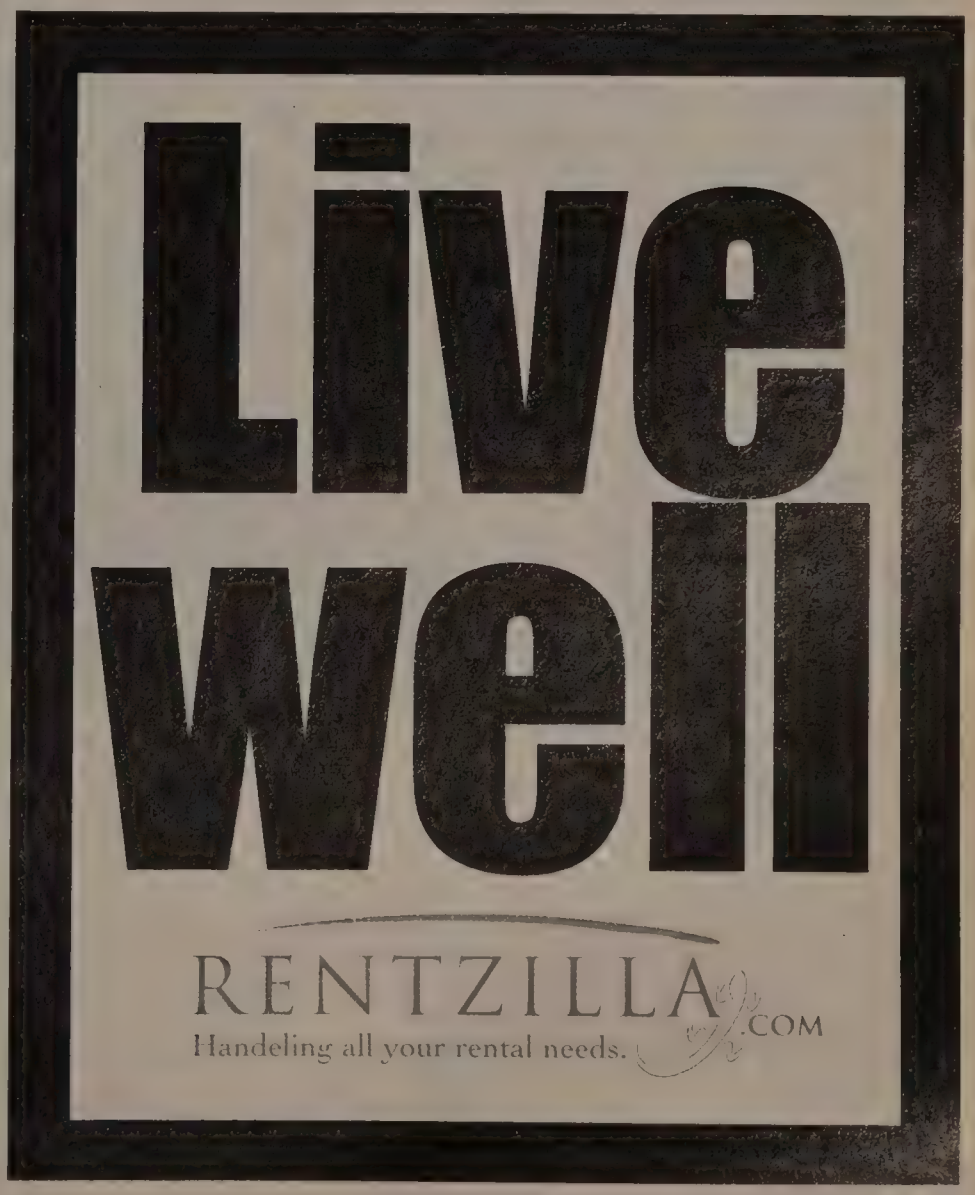
MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Celebrating the summer solstice along with Father's Day could present one too many reasons to be nostalgic about your fading youth. As the seasons turn, cardinal signs like yours respond to the potential of what's coming and the historical significance of what's passing much more than the rest of us do. But if you're feeling a bit apprehensive about the future or longing for what used to be, take heart. Starting on the 23rd, your fiery Mars ruler embarks on a joyride through creative, fun-loving Leo until August 10.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

I hate to harp on finances, but while there's action in your house of assets and values, it's hard to ignore the obvious. Besides, once your Venus ruler turns direct on the 29th, you could reverse your current stand or find a new approach to a recurring money matter. Now is also a good time to locate a precious item that'll increase the value of your collection. This desire to be good to yourself and please your loved ones won't last forever—maybe through July—so make the most of the opportunities that do arise. Take a gamble.



GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

This is a fine time to give yourself permission to indulge, be it by improving your own appearance or answering your house's cry for help. Family members may also make a pitch for more funds while it seems apparent that your generosity knows no bounds. Greater appreciation of the fundamentals follows from your Mercury ruler's travels through your Cancer house of acquisitions and values, so don't be concerned if you're not concerned with much beyond your own creature comfort and sense of well-being.

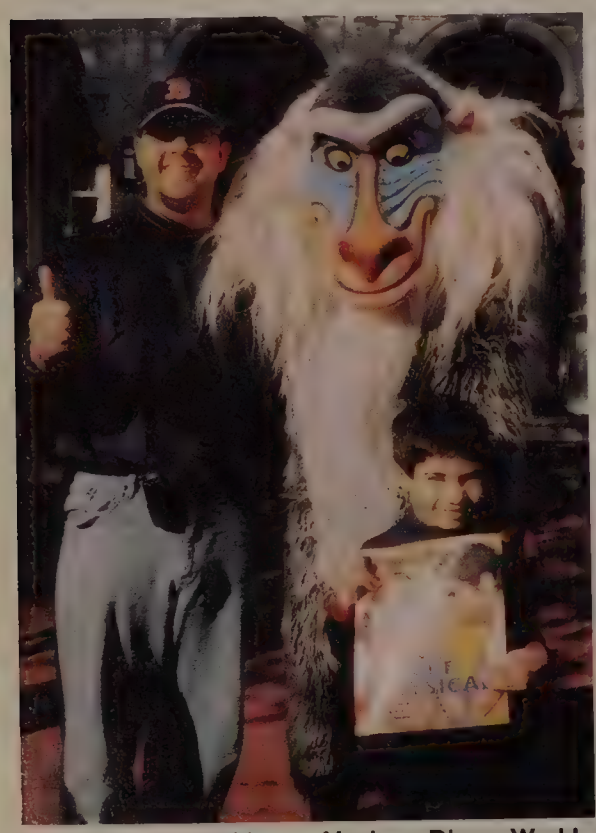
IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.



Pat Gardner, Chris Abbott and Scott Fabyan sailed this 61-foot boat, the Delphinus, across the Atlantic. This photo was taken in the middle of the crossing, which is the approximate point that they got Styx's "Come Sail Away" out of their heads.

Terence Jeffrey, editor of Human Events weekly, gets a bit IMPROPER.

Mark Sahagian and Mike Markarian prepare to pump a little iron at Muscle Beach in Venice, Calif. Remember to work your legs, too, guys: You can't shoot a shotgun out of a canoe Hadi Mezher took his son, Noah, to Disney World in Florida, where they met Rafiki from The Lion King. Noah looks happy, so maybe we're the only ones who find Rafiki abjectly terrifying.

Winning the "Random Boston Connection" award for this issue, the guard standing behind Shane Malavenda and Anna Eriksson at Drottningholm Palace in Stockholm, Sweden, is Carl-Fredrik Axelsson, brother of Boston Bruin P.J. Axelsson.

Lisa and Chris Bogdan ride a water buffalo in Phuket, Thailand. The water buffalo is a cousin of the air buffalo, which has been hunted to near extinction for its delicious wings.

A NEW HABITUDE!

In the city of Boston, upwardly mobiles are constantly moving around like pieces on a chessboard. Much like chess, real estate has become a favorite hobby. The Improper Bostonian's annual Real Estate Issue will be an invaluable tool to the Hub's thousands of house-seekers. First, we will look at some of the largest residential developments in the works for Boston's future. We will do some investigating to give you the first look at what could one day be your new home. Are you wondering what a million dollars can buy these days? Well, it depends on the neighborhood. The Improper surveys your typical million-dollar abodes in the city and beyond.

The Improper Bostonian reaches more than 392,900 readers every two weeks. And we are giving the readers what they crave, Real Estate. This is the best chance to reach your loyal repeat customer on their path to domestic bliss! Whether you're looking to buy, sell, introduce newcomers to your business or advertise great home products, this is the issue you can't miss!

The Improper Bostonian reaches more than 73,000 readers who are planning to buy a home in the next two years.

96% purchased a product or service advertised as a result of reading The Improper Bostonian.

Nearly half our readers plan to upgrade their home or apartment in the next 12 months.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the Green and White Ball, top: Suzy and Jack Welch. Middle row: Emily and Peter Webster; Jim and Meg Gordon; Rich and Kate Doyle. Bottom: Santo Politi and Gray Baldwin; Charlie Gifford and David Murphy

IT'S NOT ALL SILVER BELLS AND COCKLE SHELLS AND PRETTY MAIDS IN A ROW...

On the luxe et volupté scale, the Green and White Ball to benefit the Friends of the Public Garden rated pretty high. Held at the Ritz, the cocktail hour featured an epic raw bar, piled high with shrimp, oysters and giant tins of caviar. The ballroom was decked out like an enchanted forest, with trees on the tables lit by candles hanging from the boughs. Dinner included Dungeness crab, foie gras and truffled tenderloin, each course paired with a magnificent wine, and the band was imported from New York for the evening.

The crowd, needless to say, included most of the city's gossip-column fodder and a majority of Boston's billionaires. Among the confirmed sightings: cable potentate Amos Hostetter and his wife, Barbara; Fidelity grand poobah Ned Johnson and his wife, Lillie; legendary captain of industry Jack Welch and his wife, Suzy; alternative-power visionary Jim Gordon and his wife, Meg; banking honcha Anne Finucane and her husband, columnist Mike Barnicle; telegenic anchor couple Jonathan Hall and Karen Marinella; Harpoon head Rich Doyle and the gorgeous Kate; artist Pel Stockwell and his stunning other half, Kim; Beacon Hillions Santo Politi and Gray Baldwin; mega-philathropists Pam and John Humphrey; the organization's founder, Henry Lee, and his wife, Joan; the evening's honoree, Stella Trafford; and one guest who said, "Your wife's dress is beautiful—where'd she get it?" to which the long-suffering husband responded, "I don't know, but I'll find out when the bill comes."

By the time everyone had licked their dessert plates clean, it was nearing midnight, but the crowd kept dancing until the band packed up, and the only possible complaint about the evening is that the food was too rich and delicious.

Then again, with friends like that, who counts calories?

SO THAT'S WHY THEY GIVE BOATS WOMEN'S NAMES...

It was like one of the party scenes from The Great Gatsby (minus all the hysterical and inappropriate behavior) when the Ally Foundation hosted Celebrate for a Change at Beacon Rock, the Newport mansion of inveterate party host Brian Cunha.

Named for Alexandra "Ally" Zapp, the sailing enthusiast and Newport resident who was murdered two summers ago, the foundation's fund-raiser was the first big blowout of the season for the preppy yachting crowd.

Through a set of wrought-iron gates and down a winding drive that crosses a stone bridge, guests arrived at the house—one of the prettiest in Newport, with lawns tumbling down to the water and a 180-degree view of the harbor.

The dress was "nautical cocktail," and everyone looked appropriately yacht-y as they wandered through wood-paneled rooms, bidding on silent auction items. Out on the terrace, a band cut loose, while a man shucked oysters by the swimming pool, and the bars went through gallon after gallon of gin and rum.

Present and accounted for: Zapp's mother and stepfather, Andrea Casanova and Steve Stiles; sailboat skipper Steve Woolf and his va-va-va-voomalicious girlfriend, Lisa Rebello; lunachick Alex Gray, her beyond-fabulous mother, Winnie, and her Bahamas-bred fiancé, Eric Weiberg; ubiquitous scamp Richard Getz; bachelor-about-town Caesar Belbel; upper-crust party guy Lance Kussel; can-do babe Connie Brown and one woman who accepted a compliment on her necklace by saying, "That's the nice thing about divorce. You get to reset your diamonds."

Other amusing comments overheard: "My cocktail is broken," "I've been meaning to quit drinking since Christmas...1993," and one guy who responded to a friend's question as to why he was still wearing his bracelet from Figawi (the booze-fueled Hyannis-to-Nantucket sailing race that took place the week before) by saying, "I just woke up."

However, the funniest exchange took place when one guest asked, "Where's your boat?" to which his friend replied, "She's inside."

"No," the first clarified, "I said your boat, not your girlfriend."

"Same thing," said his friend. "They're both expensive and high-maintenance."

Celebrate for a Change, clockwise from top: Brian Cunha and Connie Brown; the view from the terrace; Winnie Gray, Lisa Robello, Alex Gray and Andrea Casanova; the party

THE MIRACLE OF REBIRTH FOR SKIN AND SOUL

Described as the miracle of rebirth for skin and soul, the SK-II skin care line has inspired utter devotion in generations of Japanese women and now this beauty secret comes to the US. Its miraculous ingredient, Pitera, was discovered by a Japanese monk who, while visiting a sake brewery, noticed that the workers, though elderly, had the smooth hands of young men. After five years of experiments, the monk developed a method to extract a seemingly magical youth-giving liquid of nutrients, vitamins, amino acids and organic acids - Pitera. The essential ingredient in all SK-II products, Pitera helps stimulate the natural renewal cycle of the skin's outer layer, for skin that appears smooth, radiant and wonderfully reborn.

REALTY CHECK

The nesting urge has hit IMPROPER staffers hard recently, with more than a few among us in the market to buy a home this past year. To the dismay of the renters, talk around the water cooler has turned away from movies and restaurants and toward soft second mortgages and 5/1 ARMs. With so much personal interest in what's for sale in Boston, plenty of passion went into planning our real estate features this issue.

Thinking beyond the current open houses, writer Ezra Dyer went in search of some of the most interesting new developments on the horizon and came up with some winners—from condos above the Virgin Megastore on Newbury Street (a Frank Gehry–designed building) to massive projects that will transform parts of the South End (page 18).

We round out our issue with a practical look at the Democratic National Convention. You've heard the hype, but what do you really need to know to navigate the city when the conventioneers descend July 26–29? Turn to page 26 for the scoop.

GETTIN' SCHOOLED

I always read Ezra's articles in the IMPROPER and always get a chuckle. But I was really in tears (the good kind) from reading the "Old School" article (June 23). As a fellow Colby grad (class of '97), I can totally relate to this experience. I remember Senior Week, right before graduation, when we were all kings and queens of campus. And the assessment of the new brand of Colby students is right on—hello, Nerdlinger. Anyway, thanks for the laugh and the memories.

PLAYOFF BOUND?

In his June 9 column on the Red Sox making the playoffs, Chris Collins demonstrates that he, like many others just exiting the box office after seeing Still, We Believe, is riding last year's wave. This is a new season, and while one would think the names on our roster would be enough to back up his argument, this game is unfortunately not played on paper. The Sox have played .500 ball over the last two months, and I look at the product night in and night out and know a few pieces need to be changed. If this team as it stands makes the playoffs, drink one for me and feel free to throw me under the bus in the season review, but I just don't see it.

THE LAST WORD. REALLY.

Let's end this back and forth on women's attitudes and men's expectations ("Beauty Bites Back Again," June 23 Letters). As a gay man whose friends are all straight, I think I can provide an impartial view. There is no doubt that women have a higher ratio of attitude to looks in Boston. I've lived around those Barbie-types in Texas and Georgia who are friendly beyond belief. And I've seen them give men who looked less than stellar more than a glance.

> WE HAVE SOME OF THE SMARTEST AND CUTEST STRAIGHT GUYS HERE. I KNOW MANY. THEY CAN'T UNDERSTAND WHY EVERY GIRL WITH ATTITUDE WEARS THE SAME UNIFORM AS HER COUNTERPARTS.
> —BRIAN BRANDT, BOSTON

It's great to have confidence if you had a great day, but the "strut" I see in women here is appalling. And the idea that there are no good looking men here with brains is a farce. We have some of the smartest and cutest straight guys here. I know many. They can't understand why every girl with attitude wears the same uniform as her counterparts. Tiffany jewelry and Kate Spade bags hold no appeal when they crowd the subway. That's not confidence. It's Pied Piperdom. And I can't tell you how desperately sad it is to see these dolls die to get my attention, and then stick their chins to the wind when I look their way.

The quality men I know are looking for something real. This is why my very best looking and smartest guy friends are with less-than-pretty girls who are instead replete with substance. But as for hope, I know many good eggs on both sides for whom this whole argument is irrelevant.

Buying, Selling, Renting?
Visit Boston's best address:
www.BostonRealEstate.net

As recently as the late 1990's, one could scarcely find a real estate web site. Today, three out of four homebuyers begin their search online using an Internet search engine. ERA Boston Real Estate Group was among the first real estate companies to embrace and harness the power of the Internet which has changed the industry forever. With thousands of new, unique visits each day, and first-page placement in all the major search engines, The ERA Boston Real Estate Group web site is the most powerful online real estate searching and marketing tool in the area.

Looking to buy? Why not use the same tools that professional real estate agents use.
Thousands of new buyers have registered for ERA Boston Real Estate Group's award-winning search tools because they give you the buyer direct access to the industry standard multiple listing databases. Join the literally thousands of new homebuyers who visit our site each day, see for yourself what's on the market for sale, and find the house or apartment that's right for you.

Looking to sell? Why not expose your property to thousands of qualified buyers every day.
Listing with us means featured placement in our web site and exposure to thousands of qualified buyers who visit our site each day for the express purpose of finding a place to live. Trying to sell on your own? We even offer a broker-assisted FSBO plan that gives you placement in the multiple listing service and costs less than advertising in the newspaper.

Looking to rent? Why not see hundreds of apartment listings, prices, sizes, and locations.
The ERA Boston Real Estate Group leasing division is one of the top rental operations in the city. Our highly ethical and professional agents rent hundreds of apartments each year to students, professionals, and families all over the Boston area. Visit our site and let us know what you're looking for. We'll take you out and show you places that work for you.

Looking for a great job? Why not call us or send along a resume.
We're always looking for hungry, self-motivated people. Prior real estate experience preferred, not required.
Already an agent somewhere else? Maybe you could use a change and dozens of new buyer leads a month. Guaranteed.

SHOWSTOPPER

When Clear Channel Entertainment got the go-ahead to resurrect the Opera House, they had their work cut out for them. The theater had closed almost 15 years ago, and the resident opera company had left nearly everything behind—rooms were overflowing with costumes, props and pieces of the building itself, which was falling apart. But that wasn't the worst of it. The once-majestic murals that adorned the 100-foot ceilings were literally dripping paint, the seats were dilapidated, moldy water was flowing down walls, ruining the elaborate craftsmanship, and rodents roamed about freely.

The restored Opera House opens this month.

After a little more than a year of construction (which included expanding the stage to accommodate modern performances and bringing in 35 artisans to restore some of the murals), the theater is set to reopen this month with a six-month run of The Lion King. The results of the $38 million renovations are stunning. Designers have restored (or re-created when necessary) as much of architect Thomas W. Lamb's original 1928 vision as possible, down to matching the original carpet patterns and wall-hanging fabrics.

Lamb modeled his creation (named the B.F. Keith Memorial Theater) after the elegant, elaborate Opera Garnier in Paris. Originally a venue for vaudeville performances, the Keith Theater was extravagant for its day. Costing $5 million, it included a two-story lobby, dozens of sparkling chandeliers, grand marble pillars, gold leaf detail, several ballroom-like lounges with ornate marble fireplaces, and gleaming domed ceilings. Although these opulent touches have been resurrected (along with the original fire curtain that hangs down to the stage), the Opera House is missing one major feature that was quite a draw during the 1920s. During the theater's vaudeville days, there was an exit that led from the men's smoking room to a certain naughty apartment complex next door. These days, intermissions are a little less...exciting. 539 Washington St., Boston (617-880-2442). —E.H.

GET SHAGGED

Last month, Newbury Street veteran Sandy Poirier opened a new salon, Shag, in a former industrial building on Summer Street. Why the departure from Newbury after 20 years? "I was looking for a place with a lot of space, high ceilings and free parking," Poirier says. "A cool place where you can get your hair cut and not be crowded in next to someone." Besides avoiding claustrophobia, the salon's large work stations (three for cutting, one for coloring) give customers privacy. "I'm not saying I'm a psychologist," Poirier says, "but I know some of my clients pretty well. And if they're talking about serious issues, they don't want the person next to them hearing it." In terms of atmosphere, Poirier is aiming for "a loft party that you don't want to leave," with music piped in via satellite radio and complimentary wine for customers—which ought to be a highlight to getting your highlights. 840 Summer St., Boston (617-268-2500). —Ezra Dyer

WILL SHORTZ

The DNC isn't the only convention in town this month. Word-game enthusiasts from across the country converge on Cambridge for the National Puzzlers League's annual convention, July 8–11. For four days, some 150 puzzlers brain-tease each other with crossword matches and word pattern games. At the helm of it all is NPL convention organizer Will Shortz. The New York Times crossword puzzle editor and NPR Puzzlemaster, who created his own major, enigmatology (puzzle solving), at Indiana University, began organizing NPL "cons" in 1976. We caught up with Shortz before the three-day mind-game extravaganza.

IB: How did you get into puzzles?
WS: In eighth grade, when asked to write a paper on what I wanted to do with my life, I wrote a paper about being a professional puzzle maker. At Indiana University they have the independent major program in which, if you're accepted, you can major in anything you want. Originally my goal was to become a lawyer, and I did get a law degree from the University of Virginia. But I never took the bar or practiced. I went right into puzzles after graduation.

IB: If you had to describe yourself with a cross hint, what would it be?
WS: The first thing that jumps to mind is "Times square," because I'm not necessarily the coolest person in the world and I work for the New York Times.

IB: What goes on at NPL conventions?
WS: The people who attend the NPL conventions are such game fanatics, they'll play puzzles and games each evening and then most of them stay up most or half of the night, playing more puzzles and games. I'd say a lot of people who attend the convention are really sharp puzzle solvers. National crossword champions, people who bowl you over with their intelligence. But they're fun and playful too.

IB: Have you ever been unable to complete a puzzle?
WS: Well, sure. I'm a pretty good solver, but a puzzle can be so vague or so obscure that a reasonable person can't do it. I don't think there would ever be a Times crossword I couldn't do, but there are some that stretch me. The National Puzzler's League has a monthly magazine called Enigma, which publishes 80 to 100 puzzles, created by members, per issue. Some of them are so difficult, only a few solvers are able to complete them.

IB: How long does it take to create the NYT crossword puzzle?
WS: The daily Times crossword takes, on average, four to 10 hours, and I would say a Sunday puzzle takes 8 to 20 hours on average. It depends on whether the gods are smiling on you. If I have a gorgeous crossword, and there's some answer keeping me from finishing it, it's very frustrating.

IB: Why do crosswords get harder as the week goes on?
WS: Monday you're coming off the weekend. Maybe you've been to some parties and your mind isn't as sharp as it normally is, so it's nice to have an easy puzzle to ease into the week. Then your mind sharpens as the week progresses. On Saturdays, most people don't have a job or classes to go to, so they have more time to devote to the puzzle. That's why that one's so difficult.

IB: Do puzzle whizzes have higher IQs?
WS: They're smart. That goes without saying. They tend to have lively minds, they're flexible, they have good senses of humor, they tend to be well-read, go to movies. You have to know a little about everything, whether it's a classical subject like history or literature, or modern subjects like rock and roll, sports and TV. Any subject within the realm of human knowledge can show up in a crossword.

IB: Do you get disgruntled NYT puzzle solvers writing to you?
WS: I get letters from people who think I made errors in the puzzle. I do make some. There are about 15 errors in the New York Times crosswords every year. And out of 32,000 clues per year, I don't think that's such a bad average.

IB: What do you find puzzling?
WS: How the furnace works in my house, how something goes wrong with my computer. Practical problems like that.

WEIGHT-WATCHERS' WINE

Light Booze... Drinking Diet Coke with a Double Whopper and fries is like pairing diet wine with steak frites and potatoes au gratin. If that's the way you cut calories, check out the first-ever low-carb wine, by Brown-Forman Wines. The helpfully titled One.6 Chardonnay (1.6 carbs per serving) and One.9 Merlot (1.9 carbs per serving) have about one-fifth the carbs of regular wine, and they're sold in stores, restaurants and local wineries (usually $9.99 for a 750 ml bottle).

Aujourd'hui at the Four Seasons

Better Baking... There's no avoiding the carbs when you're snacking on bread, but Au Bon Pain has taken a healthful turn with its new Artisan Bread collection, which is made from entirely organic flour, free of fertilizers and pollutants. The new line is part of ABP's 25th-anniversary celebration, which has also brought a new name to Fid Kennedy Avenue, site of the company's South Boston headquarters. The city has renamed the street Au Bon Pain Way.

D'hui-lectable... On June 21, the Four Seasons unveiled the second of its two major renovation projects with the reopening of its esteemed restaurant Aujourd'hui, which already has a trophy case that would make Tom Hanks jealous (most recently adding Best New American Cuisine and Best Hotel Dining from the 2004 Zagat Survey). With $2 million worth of renovations, including a chocolate-brown and powder-blue interior by Babey Moulton Jue & Booth Designs and a bar overlooking the Public Garden, the restaurant, with new chef de cuisine Jérôme Legras, is poised to pick up just where it left off; atop the Boston dining heap. 200 Boylston St., Boston (617-351-2037).

Get a 10-cent cone at Steve's.

Dessert for a Dime... We've all heard our elders preach about the price of things in their day. But on July 18, Steve's Ice Cream in Quincy Market rolls back the inflation clock to 1904 to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the ice cream cone. All cones are 10 cents from 6 to 7 pm.

Sweet Deal... Last year, romantic South End restaurant Icarus ran a prix-fixe special to celebrate its silver anniversary: three courses for $25 for the first 25 days of July. With the average meal there costing $55, it's no surprise that the deal resulted in Icarus' most successful July ever. So, lucky for us, they're bringing it back. This month, Icarus offers three courses for $26 through July 26. Menu items rotate, but dishes like native pea soup with bacon mint and sour cream, soft-shell crab with Sweet 100 tomatoes, chipotle aioli and garlic crostini sandwiches will appear on the three-course prix fixe, and many bottles of wine are reduced to $26. 3 Appleton St., Boston (617-426-1790).—E.H., J.I. and R.L.

THE DATING GAME

There's no avoiding politics in Boston once the DNC hits town this summer—even dating organizations have gone partisan. Set to launch on July 4, DemDates.com promises to bring together young liberals at a couple of parties during the DNC. If you lean more to the right, log on to www.singlerepublican.com, a site launched last November that's dedicated to "helping conservatives find their perfect soul mate." Creator and company president Tom Swanson says about 4,000 conservative singles (including Bostonians) are currently online. For nonpartisans, we found a couple of special-interest sites that could put you on the fast track to finding that special someone. Register at the Lord of the Rings dating site (http://lotr.screenromance.com), and you're a step closer to moving off your mom's couch and in with your very own Aragorn or Princess Arwen. If you're looking for love and also maybe a little money, check out www.millionairematch.com. You don't have to be rolling in it to join, but Champagne and caviar may be just a click away. —Rich Levine

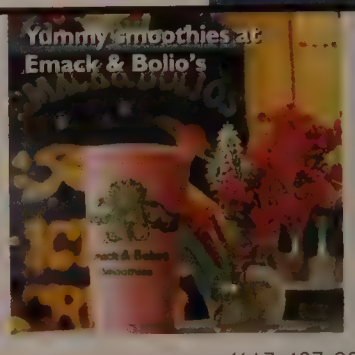
PRETTY IN PERM



If you've flipped through a fashion magazine lately, you've probably noticed that curls are everywhere. It's enough to make a straight-haired girl consider getting a perm. A mere mention of the treatment is likely to trigger flashbacks to late-'80s spiral, frizzy, overprocessed atrocities. But believe it or not, the perm has evolved in the past 15 years. Marc Harris, owner of Ecocentrix, uses a new technique to create deep waves and curls that look relaxed and beachy rather than too tight. The solutions are gentle and won't damage your hair. So even if you color, you're still a candidate. And the curls fade away in five to six months, so you won't wait while your perm grows out. The treatment takes about two hours and costs $250. 30 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-2222). —Samantha House

Singers and Zingers...American Idol meets Last Comic Standing in Chops & Chuckles, Boston's latest famous-making competition. Beginning July 8 at 9 pm, a panel of celebrity judges, including KISS 108's Billy Costa, searches for undiscovered singing and comedic talent at the Office Bar & Grill in the Financial District. The series continues every other Thursday through September, and after all is said, sung and done, winners (one comedian and one vocalist) will score prizes including a spot on stage at the Comedy Connection, a stay at the W Hotel in New York City and a makeover from Boston salon Shag (see "This Just In" on page 6). 5 Broad St., Boston (617-367-5806).

Batty Barter... Craigslist.org is known as a great Web site for everything from finding apartments to selling tickets to the Sox game. But while visiting the site to check out how much we could make subletting our apartments during the DNC, we made another discovery. Bostonians love to barter and are willing to work for a lot more than food. Craigslist Boston's barter page boasts a list of potential offers that dwarfs that of almost every other city. One user will set up your satellite TV or even fix your computer in exchange for a tennis racket. Another will take care of some of your house chores if you let him store stuff in your garage. Weirdest request? One Bostonian looking to acquire a woman's bike is offering a 50 percent discount at a novelty pen store in exchange. www.boston.craigslist.org/bar. —E.H., J.I. and R.L.

DON'T GET ME STRONG

I want to be a strongman so I can intimidate other writers.

You've probably seen a strongman competition on TV: Scandinavian guys with names like Thor Thorrgusson towing buses around and jumping hurdles with dinette sets tied to their backs. I'd love to be a strongman, but unfortunately I am neither Scandinavian nor strong, although I do sometimes grunt and scream while opening tough jars of spaghetti sauce. However, when C.J. Murphy, owner of Total Performance Sports in Everett, invites me to a training session for competitors preparing for the July 10 Mass. State Strongman Championship, I decide to get in touch with my stronger side. "I'll show you how to put a full keg on your shoulder and drink out of it. It's a neat party trick," says Murphy, who goes by "Murph." I have a feeling that after trying to put a 175-pound keg on my shoulder, my neat party trick would be showing people my hernia, but I'm game for anything. The events to be practiced are the log press and the medley, where a competitor flips a gigantic tire several times, carries a keg about 100 feet, drags an anchor chain, and then turns back into Bruce Banner.

Murph's facility is not your froufrou fitness center. You can't get a guava-mango smoothie or postworkout spa session here. What you can get is seriously strong. Murph possesses just about every strength-training certification yet devised. TPS's custom double-stack pulldown machine holds 600 pounds. The squat rack looks like it could do double duty as an engine hoist. A sign on the wall reads, "Leaving dumbbells on the bench = SEVERE beating by Murph." To say that Murph is physically imposing is like saying that J. Lo's a little fickle when it comes to love. Murph is 6 feet tall, weighs 290 pounds, and has a shaved head, a goatee, and a tattoo of a weightlifter on his forearm. The weightlifter has a bulldog head on a human body. If Murph ever has a daughter, I'd pay to watch a boyfriend come over to pick her up for a date.

When I arrive, I find an eclectic group getting warmed up: There are a few of the expected enormous dudes, a guy named John who competes in international fencing tournaments and Shang Chou, a mesomorph from MIT who picks up the heaviest logs without apparent stress. He looks to be about 6'2", 210. "Want to know his training diet?" asks Murph. "Skoal and Budweiser. I'm not joking. He's a mutant." So he's the male equivalent of the model-skinny girl who eats cake all day. I hate him.

Speaking of women, there are about five of them getting ready for the log lift. They all look like they're in good shape, and not in a Vera de Milo/Romanian Olympic Team way. The smallest woman there, Shawna, struggles with the 100-pound log but gets it with a spot. I later learn that she is the 2001 Mass. State Strongwoman champion. Another TPS member, Grace, is 53 years old, weighs 112 pounds and squats 225.

Then it's my turn. I'm afraid that I won't be able to lift the 100-pounder, which could easily fall and crush my ego. I do manage to get it, though not without a struggle—my elbows shake wussily and I strain my left wrist.

When we go outside to practice the medley, we discover that one of the women lost control of the 350-pound women's tire and rolled it into "Medium" Murph's parked car, breaking the headlight. Medium Murph, who's interning to be a trainer, is smaller than Murph, but that's all relative—he still looks as if he could be installed as a support pillar in the Zakim Bridge. Fortunately, he's not upset—he won the car in a card game anyway. I try to think of the most badass thing I've done lately. "Yeah, took a shower the other day. Didn't use the loofah. I don't give a crap."

I'M AFRAID I WON'T BE ABLE TO LIFT THE 100-POUNDER, WHICH COULD EASILY FALL AND CRUSH MY EGO.

I decide to try flipping the women's tire, which looks like it belongs on a large piece of earth-moving equipment. I get low, put my chin against the tire and push with all my might. Nothing happens. Perhaps they have a space-saver spare kicking around they could let me play with. "Get under it. Drive it up at a 45-degree angle!" Murph yells. I get my fingers under the edge and lift it up and over, grunting in glory—I'm as strong as a girl! I flip it a few more times just to show it who its daddy is, then, drunk with testosterone, I try to flip the men's tire. I push until I raise red welts on my shoulders, but I'm unable to budge it. I also fail to get the keg on my shoulder. I don't even mess with the anchor chain—I'm having pasta tonight and I've got to save a little strength for the Ragu. IB

LAUREN AMBROSE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Stunning redhead Lauren Ambrose, who plays Claire on the HBO series Six Feet Under, was born and raised in New Haven, Conn. A classically trained singer, she studied voice at Tanglewood. Her acting career began with stage and TV work in New York. After making her theater debut at age 14 in the Vineyard Theatre's production of Soulful Scream of a Chosen Son, she was involved with off-Broadway theater groups such as EST and Naked Angels throughout her adolescence. After moving to Los Angeles at age 18, she made her feature film debut opposite Kevin Kline in the gay comedy In & Out and followed that up with the teen comedy Can't Hardly Wait. Her other film credits include starring roles in Swimming and Psycho Beach Party, but her breakthrough role came when she was cast as the frequently strung-out kid sister on HBO's hugely popular series about a family in the funeral business. Ambrose owns a home in the Berkshires and lives with her husband in L.A.

Jonathan Soroff: So do you see dead people?

Lauren Ambrose: Not if I can help it.

JS: Now that you're on Six Feet Under, do you think about death more than you used to?

LA: No. It's cool that we deal with big issues like that, but I'm not thinking about them all the time. I'm young. It's hard for me to go there mentally.

JS: Cremation or burial?

LA: I don't know. I do know that I don't want to go through that whole process of being drained of fluid, or all the weird scientific stuff. I've also had enough good makeup artists to know that I don't want to be wearing salmon lipstick for all eternity.

JS: You were trained as a singer. Do you still sing?

LA: I haven't been using my singing as much as I thought I would, but I hope that my career and my life bring me, at some point, to a point where I do.

JS: Did you go to a lot of funerals growing up?

LA: Actually, yeah. I have all these memories of my grandmother taking me. There was always some funeral to go to, and she always took me with her. It was kind of strange. And when I was in high school, I sang at a lot of weddings and funerals.

JS: Worst funeral you ever went to?

LA: There are some that stick out. There was one, for a relative or distant cousin—we're Italian, so everyone's an uncle or aunt or cousin. Anyway, this one guy owned a slaughterhouse, so someone delivered this enormous flower arrangement in the shape of a cow's head. It was unbelievable.

JS: I'm sorry to hear it. That sounds horrible.

LA: No, it wasn't horrible. It was amazing. It was great. I think we should all be so lucky that someone would go to all the trouble of making a flower arrangement in the shape of whatever animal we were most associated with.

JS: Scary thought. So how much are you like your character on the show? For instance, she likes to do drugs.

LA: I don't do drugs. I like to be sharp and use my brain and be present. You need to be very clear to impersonate someone who's on drugs.

JS: You said you came to L.A. to act, not to be a star…

LA: Yeah, I read that somewhere too, but I can't imagine saying it. I think maybe what I meant was that I really like acting, and I didn't move to L.A. to become famous.

JS: But now you're a big star.

LA: I don't really see it that way.

JS: Does everyone ask if your hair color is real?

LA: It is my real hair color. You can't buy this. Well, actually, you probably can, but I didn't.

JS: Does anyone call you Red?

LA: No. I had an uncle called Red, though.

JS: One role you'd kill for?

LA: I'd like to sing on film, in some capacity. I don't know what that means, exactly, because I don't necessarily want to do a traditional musical. Maybe a story about a singer.

JS: One role you're glad you passed on—maybe Annie in summer stock?

LA: Oh God, there's a very long list, but I can't think of one in particular. I've gone through periods in my life when I was so tortured or depressed over not getting some job I was certain I was meant for, and then the thing came out, and it was pure garbage, and I was so grateful I didn't do it. Or something else came along that was better, and that was the reason, cosmically, I didn't get the other thing, and I realized I can't be my usual control freak about it. That's the thing about being an actor: It's hard for people who want any kind of control over their lives. It's a great exercise in faith.

"THAT'S THE THING ABOUT BEING AN ACTOR: IT'S HARD FOR PEOPLE WHO WANT ANY KIND OF CONTROL OVER THEIR LIVES. IT'S A GREAT EXERCISE IN FAITH."

JS: Ever lied to get a part?

LA: Well, some old actress told me never to admit I couldn't do something, so whatever they'd ask, I'd always say, "I'm taking lessons." "Can you ride a horse?" "I'm taking lessons." "Can you jump on a trampoline?" "No, but I'm taking lessons." That was my mantra, but I guess I just blew that one.

JS: Biggest hidden talent?

LA: I'm a pretty good baker. I'm learning.

JS: Taking lessons?

LA: [Laughs.] Yeah. I just made my mother-in-law (who lives in Needham) a birthday cake, and it turned out fabulously! I'm perfecting my genoise, which is the very basic French spongy cake. Boy, is this boring. Nobody wants to hear about this.

JS: You'd be surprised. Six Feet Under is sort of morbid and has a cult following. Are the fans creepier than for most TV shows?

LA: Well, all the misfits and malcontents love Claire, but the show has a pretty classy following. They seem pretty well educated and sophisticated. And nobody really thinks I'm Claire, except that sometimes older people will come up to me and tell me to watch my language, or behave myself.

JS: What's more important to you: the fact that HBO's shows are thought-provoking, or that they're hugely popular?

LA: Well, it's obviously great to be part of something that's really successful and at the same time not feel like I've sold my soul.

JS: What would be a sellout for you?

LA: I don't want to sound like a snob, because I want to work and I'd like to do things that I never thought I'd do, to stretch myself. Maybe a few years ago, I might have said, "I don't want to do big movies," but I don't want to be naive about it. It might be an interesting learning experience, or kind of amazing to be in a big, loud action movie.

JS: So should we look for you in Vin Diesel's next project?

LA: Well…um, no. Let's face it. I tend to like small movies that are about real people and everyday things.

JS: What's the strangest thing you've read about yourself since becoming someone who has strange things written about them?

LA: Well, someone got my birthday wrong; and then they announced it on the radio, and then people started calling me to wish me a happy birthday on the wrong day. Then there was an English magazine that said I loved going to awards shows because I wanted to see what Nicole Kidman would be wearing. I don't know if they got me mixed up with some girl on another page, but I just can't imagine that I ever would have said that.

JS: Is it true that you're a Red Sox fan?

LA: Huge. I'm really glad that Trot and Nomar are back. You know, I did the Nomar Bowl once. I don't think he had any idea who I was, or why I was there, but it was very exciting for me.

JS: What did you eat the last time you were at Fenway?

LA: It was in April, when we played the Yankees, and I had an Italian sausage from the guy outside, although I must say that as much of a ballpark purist as I am, I do love that they serve Legal Sea Foods chowder.

JS: So how much do you hate doing interviews?

LA: Ten, on a scale of one to 10. I don't know why, either. I just feel like I'm under a microscope. I guess I should develop some wacky persona and go into character.

JS: Do you believe in life after death?

LA: Oh, brother. I never should've signed on for a show about a funeral home. I believe in life.

JS: Well, good. Now stop agonizing over what Nicole Kidman will be wearing to the next awards show.

LA: Oh, great. That's just what I wanted you to print: I sit around obsessing about it, drawing sketches of her and her outfits. I guess I should seek professional help.

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

TIME FOR AINGE TO BLOW IT UP

The Celtics should truly start from scratch; Pokey proves it's not all about batting average.

It's time. Yes, sadly. It's time for the Celtics to send another star packing: Paul Pierce.

The Celtics' main trigger man, Danny Ainge, doesn't appear to have any type of plan other than going young and more athletic. Dealing Pierce would be in line with that strategy, right?

The rationale is simple: The team has been decimated by Ainge. So if rebuilding is truly the way back to glory, it's going to take time, maybe more time than Danny boy will have on the job. Definitely more time than Pierce has at playing at an All Star level. If things ever do turn around, Pierce's legs and shoulders will be shot from carrying 11 very large men for so many years. So why not jettison Pierce for young talent, talent that will mature with the rest of the green Green Team members?

Pierce has value. Use him to get another high schooler or two—maybe even future consideration on a middle-school guard. At this rate there are a couple that should be ready to play in the NBA by their sophomore year in high school.

It must be hard for Pierce to be a part of Ainge's antics after watching the Celtics struggle for the first part of his career, then coming within two wins of making the NBA Finals in 2002. He didn't sign up for another rebuilding project, not at age 27. He's in his prime and didn't expect to spend it playing the role of father, mother and/or baby-sitter to a young team that has no chance of winning in the next two to three seasons.

The situation has the potential to get ugly for Pierce, Ainge and the Celtics. Last year, the team was divided into two factions; guys who were concerned about the next opponent and guys who were concerned with dinner plans after the game. Unfortunately, there were a lot of the latter.

Danny, do everyone a favor: Avoid a potential Kansas meltdown and trade Pierce before it's too late. He'll understand—actually, he'll probably be overjoyed—but you'll have some (more) explaining to do to the season-ticket holders. Maybe then you can appease them by revealing the master scheme that's going to take this disjointed group to the top of the NBA. And while you're at it, could you show that plan to the rest of us too?

REESE'S PUZZLE PIECES

Who can forget how Red Sox second baseman Todd Walker became Mr. Clutch last fall? When the big bats were faltering, Walker was mashing his way into the hearts of Red Sox Nation.

Unfortunately for Walker, the Red Sox formula for winning doesn't necessarily include clutch-hitting, offensive-minded second baseman. That's fine. The Sox put an emphasis on second basemen who can play the position, turn double plays and cover ground like a hound dog.

Walker's ticket out of town came courtesy of a soft Jorge Posada blooper, which turned into a two-run double in Game 7 at Yankee Stadium. After a few months watching Pokey Reese, most New Englanders can agree with the sentiment sighted on bumper stickers around town: "Pokey would have had it."

Reese's tenure with the Sox has been electrifying, especially considering that he is a career .250 hitter. But Red Sox fans know their baseball and they know a good thing when they see it, which is why

> IF THINGS EVER DO TURN AROUND, PIERCE'S LEGS AND SHOULDERS WILL BE SHOT FROM CARRYING 11 VERY LARGE MEN FOR SO MANY YEARS

Pokey has become a fan favorite. He just might be the best glove man ever to grace the Red Sox infield—better than Cronin, Doerr, Pesky and yes, even Nomar.

In high school, Pokey was a quarterback throwing touchdown passes to current Patriots wideout David Patten. Now he makes the throws from second base. Fine with us. It doesn't matter where he's throwing it as long as it's for the Red Sox.

Pokey's supporters are falling in line pied-piper fashion, which is remarkable considering the way Mark Bellhorn has exceeded all expectations. Bellhorn's bat has created a minor dilemma for manager Terry Francona. But when it comes to solving the Pokey/Bellhorn conundrum, Francona, like the rest of us, will remember Game 7 in Yankee Stadium. Pokey has to play, no questions asked. IB

BUILDING THE FUTURE

BY EZRA DYER

IN A HOT RESIDENTIAL REAL ESTATE MARKET, DEVELOPERS LOOK FOR UNIQUE ANGLES TO HELP DISTINGUISH THEIR NEW PROPERTIES.

Anyone who's gone condo shopping in past few years knows that Boston real estate commands top dollar, even for unremarkable properties. It might seem intuitive that with residential real estate in such high demand, developers would be putting up ho-hum buildings, slapping a gasp-inducing price tag on the units, and going home to watch TLC or Extreme Home Makeover. On the contrary, the robust housing market is driving some creative projects that feature unique calling cards to distinguish them from the Boston real estate crowd. Here's a look at several developments around town that are in various stages of completion, from a glimmer in the eye of an architect to almost ready for your favorite shade of paint.

LOCATION, LOCATION, LOCATION

Boston is always expanding outward, but the neighborhoods that were the new frontiers of a few years ago—Jamaica Plain and South Boston, for instance—have officially been discovered by the home-shopping masses. However, there are pockets of land close to the city epicenter that, while far from cheap, are underdeveloped. East Boston and Fort Point, specifically, are poised to explode with new condos over the next few years.

"Residential's hot, and it's about the only thing that's moving at this point," says Jamie Fay, president of Fort Point Associates urban planning and environmental consultants. "Along the East Boston waterfront there are 1,500 housing units at various stages of development." Among the projects are Maverick Gardens, where the first units are scheduled to open by February of next year; Clippership Wharf, which will include 400 condos; Hodge Boiler Works, where construction begins next spring on 100 high-end condos on the site of a former steamship boiler factory; and Massport Piers, which breaks ground soon on 550 condos and rental units. "Massport Piers is a Roseland Properties project," says Fay, "and they've had a lot of success in northern New Jersey transforming industrial and into residential. That's their speciality, and that's what they're doing here."

So why is Eastie attracting all this investment capital? Fay points out a host of reasons the home of Santarpio's Pizza and Logan Airport is one of the Next Big Things. "The views from East Boston are stunning beyond belief, the Maverick T station is one stop away from the Financial District, and East Boston is next to the airport but not on the flight paths, so it's amazingly quiet. It's kind of a happening place."

Another happening place is the Fort Point Channel area, where new residential projects are going up next to the warehouses and industrial buildings that define the neighborhood's atmosphere (and are themselves often home to condos). One development that will likely be welcomed not only by potential buyers, but the general public as well, is 500 Atlantic Avenue. This 20-story hotel/condo tower will do the Boston skyline a favor by wrapping around and obscuring from view the 237-foot-tall cement Big Dig ventilation towers at the center of the site. When construction is completed, owners in the highest-priced units will also be unable to see, hear or smell the stacks, which certainly ought to be the case for condos that will cost $1.4 million and up.

Fort Point is also home to the Channel Center development. Consisting of new construction (25 Channel Center) and renovated lofts (35 Channel Center), and studio/living space for artists (15 Channel Center), the development encapsulates the area's mix of renovations and from-the-ground-up construction. Condos are on sale now, and prices are commensurate with the location (between South Station and the new convention center) and amenities. Lofts include standard-issue lux accessories like granite counters and stainless steel appliances, while some of the two-story homes in 25 Channel Center feature atriums with 17-foot-tall ceilings. One example: a 2,000-square-foot, two-bedroom in 25 Channel Center is listed for $895,000.

GUT IT

Charlestown and the Back Bay are both long established as desirable places to live, but two projects taking shape in those high-dollar enclaves aim to set themselves apart by mixing history with high-profile designers.

At the Charlestown Navy Yard, the former ship-building site (since 1980 home to a gaggle of apartments known as Constitution Quarters) is being comprehensively transformed by the London-based Philippe Starck and Yoo design team. "Yoo by Starck," as the company is known, is responsible for such cutting-edge projects as the Icon condos in Miami, and Downtown by Philippe Starck, in New York. Their new Charlestown development, Parris Landing, is slated for its grand opening this summer. Plans include a new health club and redesigned courtyard and atrium spaces that feature Starck sculpture, modern furniture and, in an illustration of Starck's minimalist-cool philosophy, concrete flooring with zinc borders. The renovation also addresses functional shortcomings of the property, such as the leaky garage. (The roofs on four out of the five buildings in the complex are also being replaced.)

Parris Landing is making the most of its affiliation with a well-known designer. Besides the aforementioned Starck influences on the common spaces, the furniture in the new business center will be designed by Starck, the community room will be "a Starck-designed environment" and the landscaping and pool area are described as "inspired by Philippe Starck." "Branding is very important, from an entry-level project to a multimillion-dollar project," says Kevin Ahearn of Otis & Ahearn, the sales and marketing agent for Parris Landing. "Starck is the ultimate in branding, because he's an icon. This concept that [Yoo by Starck] has—very clean, cutting-edge, minimalist—they've been doing it all over the world, from Buenos Aires to Tel Aviv. I think it's part of a larger trend of international designers working on projects in Boston. The new ICA, the convention center, the Zakim Bridge—that's all being encouraged, to the credit of the city."

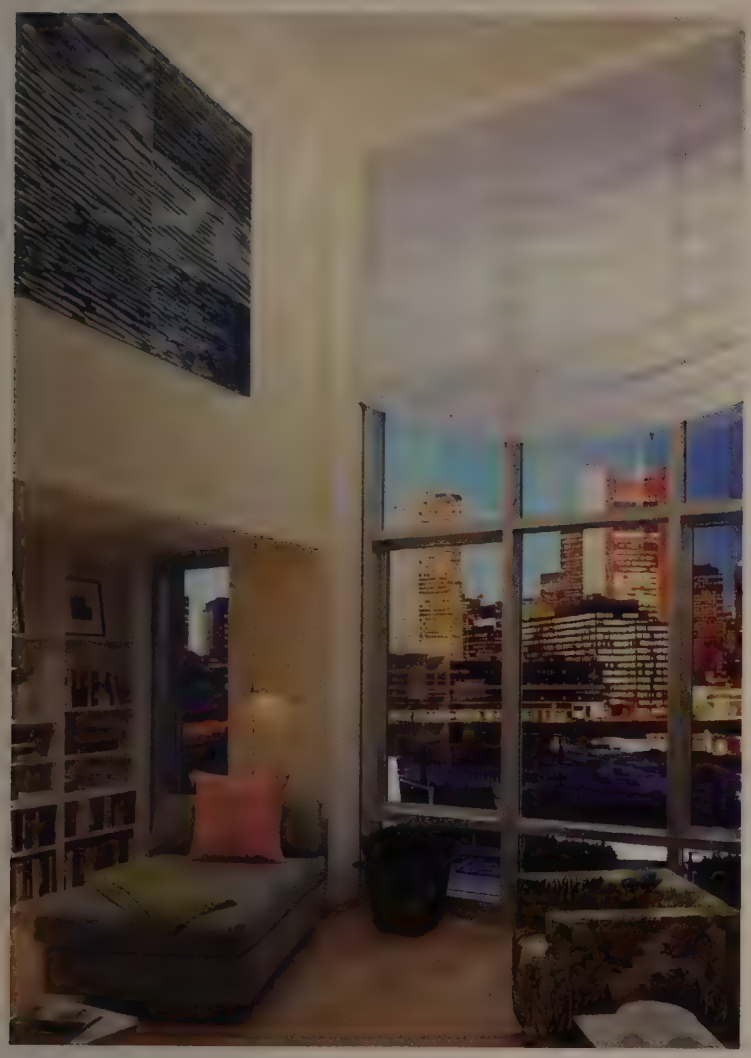
Down at the Mass. Ave. end of Newbury Street, another upcoming conversion will transform four floors of offices at the Frank Gehry–designed 360 Newbury Street into high-end condos. The bottom floors of the building are home to the Virgin Megastore, but floors four through eight will soon house some of the most chichi condos in the city. Built in the 1920s, and at one time headquarters of the organization that predated the MBTA, 360 Newbury got the Gehry treatment in the mid '80s, when it was turned into boutique offices. Attention-grabbing Gehry touches include a lobby and elevator trimmed in blue Brazilian granite. "This will be the only opportunity in Boston to live in a Frank Gehry–designed building," says James Elkus of Capital Properties, which owns the building. "He's really one of the premier architects in the world today. And you can't beat being on Newbury Street. From the penthouses, you'll be able to see into Fenway Park. The prices will be on the higher end for luxury condos, but who wouldn't want to live in this building, if you could afford it?"

HITTING THE ROAD

Two other major developing residential projects in the heart of the city tie their existence to Boston's major traffic arteries—the land along what used to be the elevated Central Artery (soon to be the Rose Kennedy Greenway park) and the gaping holes over the Mass. Pike in the South End.

Plans are floating about for a residential/retail/office development to anchor the southern end of the Greenway, as the Mass. Turnpike Authority has already put the 10-acre parcel up for bid for development. That site could eventually contain a 600-foot office tower and 1,500 housing units. But already, smaller buildings going up along the Greenway are taking advantage of their suddenly lucrative location.

"One of the big issues with new construction is lead time," says Spaulding and Slye Colliers vice chairman David Neskey. "Above 100-plus units, it's hard to get financing and it takes a long time to sell them." Smaller buildings like the 96-unit Folio Boston, at 80 Broad Street, can be completed with relatively little lead time—and risk—for the developers. The condos at Folio Boston, when completed in late 2005, will run from $350,000 up to $2 million.



In the South End, ground has been broken on Columbus Center, a seven-acre concentration of lofts, tower condos, brownstones, parks and a hotel that will occupy the space over and adjacent to the Mass. Pike, from Clarendon Street east past Arlington Street. The most prominent feature of the development is the 35-story hotel and residential tower going up on the corner of Clarendon and Columbus Avenue, which will offer what project spokesman Will Woodruff describes as "sky living like Boston has never seen before." On the other side of Columbus, a series of four- to 11-story buildings will cater to a Four Seasons/Ritz-type clientele, who want concierge and spa service with their condo. That section of Columbus Center will also have a park behind it, one of a total of four in the development. Further up the Pike, lofts will face Berkeley Street where a bridge now crosses the highway, brownstones will line the currently barren side of Cortes Street, and more condos will face Arlington and a small park at the top of the development. And yes, there will be a parking garage (595 spaces), hidden behind the Cortes Street condos. Condo prices will range from $450 to $1,300 per square foot, with the skyscraper towers being the choicest addresses. In all, a total of 451 new residential units are being created, where right now there's a sunken, noisy traffic pit. Woodruff says the project's main selling point is location, which, as with the properties along the Greenway, is the result of playing a large-scale game of hide-a-highway.

MO' MONEY

One thing you may have noticed about all of the aforementioned developments: None of them are cheap. When the IMPROPER conducted a roundtable two years ago with some of the city's top real estate experts, we asked them whether they thought Boston was in a real estate bubble. After all, prices seemed too steep to maintain their climb for long. Two years later, prices are still climbing, and developers are still struggling to meet demand. If you're looking to buy, you can look beyond the open houses of next weekend by visiting the Boston Redevelopment Authority Web site (www.ci.boston.ma.us/bra) to find out what's in the pipeline—not only for the new properties themselves, but for the effect they could have on their surrounding neighborhoods. With that, we're going to go peruse listings along Cortes Street in Bay Village. IB

THE ART OF LIVING

DOES SIZE MATTER TO YOU?

Well, it does to us.

When it comes to size, we at Metro Realty know that bigger doesn't always mean better. Compared to much larger real estate agencies, we have a select team of hand-picked, highly skilled (and awfully friendly) professionals who won't be happy until you are. And that's just a couple of the reasons why Boston Magazine named us "Best of Boston."

So whether you're looking to buy a new home or thinking of selling your old one, choose Metro Realty, Boston's best boutique real estate agency, to help you out.

Pick up the phone and call us or check out our Web site today. And remember...in the end, it's not the size that counts, it's how you perform that matters.

MILLION-DOLLAR REALITY CHECK

ONCE UPON A TIME A $1 MILLION HOME MEANT A MANSION WITH ALL THE BELLS AND WHISTLES. BUT THAT'S NO LONGER THE CASE IN BOSTON. HERE'S A LOOK AT WHAT THAT SUM BUYS TODAY.

"If I had a million dollars I'd buy you a house."
—The Barenaked Ladies

Unfortunately, a million dollars no longer buys you as much house as you might expect—at least not in the city. With real estate prices in many Boston neighborhoods soaring beyond rational comprehension, the once-revered seven-figure milestone—previously reserved for those with oodles of old money who lived in unabashed luxury—is kind of, well, commonplace. "It just doesn't have the cachet it used to have," says Boston realtor Bruce McCue, of Atlantic Associates.

As recently as five years ago, $1 million would've put you in a sizable property in one of Boston's premier neighborhoods. That's no longer the case. In places like the Back Bay or Beacon Hill, you may even find yourself compromising a little at the $1 million price point—you might not, for example, get the kitchen of your dreams, a full range of amenities or even a parking space. "You can still get a property for $1.2 million," says Sally Brewster of Brewster & Berkowitz realtors, "but it's not going to be on Louisburg Square or Chestnut Street."

"Gone is the expectation that $1 million will buy you the fabulous-forever house," says Martyn Scott, an agent with Gibson Domain Domain. "You're going to have to come to terms with the fact that you aren't going to get this or that." Rene Bonner Oranburg of Prudential Edna Kranz simply tells people there is no perfect house anymore.

Even when buyers spend seven figures on a home, it's not uncommon that they then do hundreds of thousands of dollars of renovations. "Buy the diamond in the rough and make it fit your needs," Richard Golembeski of Baron Associates advises his clients.

Condos in downtown hot spots are some of the most sought-after properties; some have doubled in price in the last five years. Because some properties go for as high as $1,000 per square foot, it's not unheard of for a one-bedroom comprising around 1,000 square feet to top a cool million. Just as in Manhattan, desirable Boston addresses have always fetched relatively exorbitant prices. But it's only recently that so many places in the South End and communities like Brighton have topped the million-dollar mark.

Sure, expansive single-family homes might still be found in Dorchester or even Jamaica Plain for a million. But otherwise, you're going to have to go outside the city limits. Want a bona fide mansion? You're probably going to have to look in a second-tier suburb beyond Route 128 if you have a budget of only a million bucks. (See the photos and sidebars that accompany this story for a sample of Boston-area homes in the $1 million price range.)

"Dated, very dated," is how the new owner describes this property. But she and her husband saw potential, and the empty-nest couple is planning to completely gut the apartment, transform it into a one-bedroom, and build a brand-new kitchen. They ruled out Beacon Hill early on, not because of its high prices, but because of its lack of parking. This one has deeded parking…and space for the couple's oversized dog!

"It's very different from five or 10 years ago," says Chobee Hoy of Chobee Hoy Associates in Brookline. "But it's also true with the loaf of bread I buy." Even in the wake of one of the biggest real estate booms, the median price of a home in the United States was still only $171,600 in the fourth quarter of 2003. But million-dollar homes have increased in number. According to the Federal Reserve's Survey of Consumer Finances, the number of million-dollar homes in the U.S. nearly tripled between 1989 and 2001, from 300,000 to 850,000.

What's driving the surge? Empty-nest baby-boomers, who in many cases have reaped astronomical wealth from the sales of their suburban homes, are moving back into cities all across the nation, not just in Boston. Often, they downsize in space, but not necessarily in price—knowing full well it's smart to invest their capital back in high-end properties, which have increased the most not only in volume, but also in rate of appreciation.

What's more, young urban professionals are increasingly playing this game. "You don't need a particularly huge income to afford a million-dollar home anymore," says Avi Rome of Coldwell Banker. "I see a lot of thirty-somethings—physicians, lawyers, businesspeople—who can afford a million-dollar property." Other agents point out that with interest rates so low, it's in a buyer's best interest to borrow as much as a bank will lend them. What's more, with the threat of interest rates creeping up in the next few months, buyers may be rushing to take advantage of a good thing. How low interest rates affect high-end buyers is still unclear; a recent Coldwell Banker survey of its nationwide sales associates revealed that 31 percent of seven-figure home purchases were paid for in cash.

Another recent trend is buying a high-end home as a cooperative venture. Since more-expensive homes tend to appreciate at a higher rate, some buyers look to purchase a property outside their personal affordability range by renting out a portion, or living in a million-dollar multifamily with another buyer.

So what is the new milestone? Since one of the hottest price ranges, according to many agents, is the $500,000–$700,000 bracket, absorption rates have dropped for $1 million properties; realtors believe buyers, in some cases, are still affected psychologically by seven figures. But many realtors say they have no problems selling properties for well above a million. "The new milestone is now $1.8 or $2 million," says one realtor. Give it a few years. It's inevitable. We'll be saying how $2 million doesn't buy you much anymore. IB

For those who want a little more bang for their buck but still want accessibility to the city, Newton is the perfect place. This particular property has been a favorite of university professors because of the colossal built-in bookshelves in the family room. Open houses for this property attracted dozens of potential buyers, and it was on the market only for a month.

"Five or six years ago, 2,600 square feet was going for around $1.1 million," says Premier Properties' Deborah Gordon. "Now you get a lot less square footage for that price." The noise factor along the waterfront is significantly decreased now, and the promise of beautiful parkland in place of the old Southeast Expressway has produced renewed interest. You can still get some properties at Rowes for around or under $1 million (Gordon also recently sold a 1,000-square-foot one-bedroom for $800,000 there), but buyers have to prioritize, deciding which amenities are most important. The premier units go for much higher.

"A lot of lofts downtown are $500,000 to $700,000," says Lawrence Shevick of Kimball Borgo realtors in Downtown Boston. "Designers and architects typically cannot afford a higher price range." Shevick says he had something priced at $1,050,000 and he broke it up into two units. Because of this fear of high pricing, not many lofts in Boston go above a million, but this property is a little special.
